

ODD BITS OF LIFE.

A sparkling bit of comedy was enacted on Broadway yesterday afternoon, says the New York Star. One of Colonel Lamont's yellow-bellied cars passed by Thirty-third street, having as its sole occupant a young girl of 20. She was a very pretty brunette, with dark, curly hair, big, expressive eyes, and long, drooping eyelashes. In her lap she carried a bundle and in her hand she held a paper-backed novel, which she was reading intently. She was the daughter of one of New York's best-known musical directors. A few feet below Thirty-third street a middle-aged man, holding a freshly lighted cigar in his hand, swung on to the front platform of the car. Glancing inside he espied its pretty young occupant. She was smiling at what she was reading and the flush on her cheeks made her bewitchingly attractive. Instantly the man cast his cigar away, pushed back the car door, entered, and sat down opposite the fair reader. She paid no attention to him and continued her reading without a flicker of interest. The man made several futile attempts to attract her notice; finally he succeeded. The young girl looked up, recognized her companion as a well known singer at the Casino, and involuntarily smiled. The actor immediately assumed a victory, but the girl raised herself again in her book, and try as he would he could not cause her to again lift her eyes. At Twenty-third street she left the car. As she did so she shot a sly glance at her persistent admirer. He arose and followed her to the rear platform, standing there watching her retreating figure. As she reached the curb she turned around and looked directly at the car. This was enough. The singer jumped off and hastened back. The young girl stood awaiting him. As he approached and politely raised his hat she said: "You evidently don't know me, sir, but I do you; you were one of the guests at my christening. If you will kindly carry this bundle I shall be glad to have your company home. I know mamma will be delighted to see you. My name is —" The actor turned red, white and blue; then, bracing himself, he said: "Well, you were the prettiest baby I ever saw, and years have improved you. Now, please let me apologize, and when you tell this incident at home, please leave my name out. You may tell your mother, however, that you have learned that that the proverb, 'There is no fool like an old fool' is pretty nearly true. Good-by." And the actor raised his hat and went off to hunt a fresh cigar.

A Tax-Dodger's Ingenuity. The ingenuity and pertinacity of the "tax-dodgers" have become proverbial, says the Youth's Companion, and because such men are both dishonest and unpatriotic the world always enjoys a laugh at their expense. A French newspaper cites a case in point, the would-be "dodger" being a certain well-known journalist and author, a shrewd man, it is plain, but in the present instance a little too shrewd. In France as it appears, dogs which are classified as useful are taxed at the rate of 4 francs a year, but "dogs of luxury," or those kept merely for the personal satisfaction of their owners, are chargeable at the rate of 16 francs. The author in question had a shepherd dog which he kept only as a companion, and consequently as a "dog of luxury," but he reported the dog as a "useful dog," because, as every one knows, shepherd dogs are useful.

He was cited to appear before a justice of the peace on a certain day to show cause why his dog should not pay a tax of 16 francs. In the meantime the author went to his butcher.

"Have you such a thing as a sheep?" he asked. "Yes." "Can you send me one at such a place on the 3d of March?" "Certainly." "How much is it?" "Sixty-two francs."

"And you will buy the creature back from me for how much?" "Fifty-two francs."

Here was 10 francs' loss on the sheep, but 12 francs' gain on the dog. Two francs were worth saving, and the bargain was struck.

On the day named the writer appeared before the magistrate and declared that he had a flock, and the dog was his shepherd. "But where is your flock?" asked the justice of the peace. "Here," your honor, answered the writer, as he beckoned the butcher, who stood near by. "It is a very small flock, but it is nevertheless a flock in the eye of the law."

Thereupon the butcher came forward and deposited upon a bench a carcass of a sheep, skinned and dressed. The author had forgotten to tell him that the sheep must be alive!

The owner of the dog was taxed the 16 francs and was condemned to pay a fine of 32 francs for attempting to evade the law, and as the butcher would pay him only 30 francs for the carcass of a sheep which "had been" hauled before the court, his attempts to save 2 francs resulted in a net loss of thirty times that amount.

WORKING PETE IN. An Unsuccessful Attempt to Do a Grasping Monopoly. From the New York Sun. "Can't you see these 'ere railroads much?" observed the young man in the seat ahead, after we got fairly out of Mauch Chunk.

"How do you mean?" I asked, suspecting he had a good one on the old man, and I'm dying to tell it," he grinned. "I live about twenty miles below here, and within half a mile of the railroad. One afternoon, about six months ago, my brother Pete got hurt in our saw mill and was brought home unconscious. We had just got him home when a neighbor came along and said a passenger train had been dethched at the crossing and a good many people hurt. This was just at dark, and Pete hadn't come to yet. Soon as the old man heard of the accident to the cars he scratched his head, looked Pete over and then said to me: "Jim, it's with trying for. We'll take Pete down on a mattress and mix him in and try to get damages from the railroad."

"I was against it, but he said it was a go, and so we got out a mattress and lugged Pete down to the crossing. Four or five cars were off the track and lots of people hurt, and we slid Pete in among three or four lying on the grass and groaning to kill. It just happened that one of the railroad attorneys was on the train, and he went about asking names and writing 'em down. An edging had caught in the saw and given him an awful whack over the head, and the lawyer felt him over and asked: "Do any of you know this poor fellow?" "I happen to know him," answered the old man. "His name is Pete Staynor, and he order get a thousand dollars for this."

looked around in a dazed way, and yelled out: "Why in Halifax don't you clear that saw?" "And at that the old man got away, and I after him; and Pete went on to tell all about how he happened to get hurt, and to wonder how he got there, and we had to sneak back and lug him all the way home. "And what did the old man say?" I asked. "Say! Why, there's half a mile of road with the trees bilistered on each side of it, and he's had everybody kicking him until the whole neighborhood is hip lamed and can't climb a doorstep."
