HE IS A DEALER IN COIN

And Handles Millions of Dollars' Worth Every Year.

The Man Who Buys and Sells Small Change—What He Does With the Nickels and Pennies He Purchases.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Every working day, closel or sunshine, during banking hours, a faded wagon of slight frame and leather covering, drawn by a Rosinante, with a meek visage and the cut of a worker, may be seen standing a few minutes at a time in front of some one or another of the many banks that abound in the neighborhood of the City Hall. From this wagon descends a man with an active tread and dark hair graying under the rains of probably fifty springs. In his hand he holds a canvas bag of large size and evidently of heavy weight, which he draws from the back of the wagon, and with which he enters a near by bank. If he does not take a bag into the bank the process is reversed and he emerges with a large bag of money, deposits it in the wagon and drives off rapidly.

Eaw are better known to the opulent

Few are better known to the opulent business men of the city and less known to the public at large than Theodore V. Smalley. Mr. Smalley's occupation is that of a broker, a title borne by scores of wealthy and worthy citizens, sesidents of the city, and not sufficient in itself to distinguish its bearer's vocation in life as in any way remarkable. But the nature of the brokerage business that Mr. Smalley has transacted for over the last 20 years is unique. No one else in this city is in the same sense a broker. One or two others, perhaps, are in New York, which city, however, Mr. Smalley includes to a certain extent, in his field of operations.

Long ago there were men of Mr. Smalley's business, whose abodes were in the vicinity of royal courts, and who were the confidants, creditors and counselors of chieftains and princes. In the present day it is in Pekin, Nankin, Gizni, Cabul, Teheran and others of the thousand and one cities of the dreamy orient that they must be looked for. They might be discovered in some of the cities of the Dark Continent.

He is a money broker, is Mr. Smalley.

Continent.

He is a money broker, is Mr. Smalley. To buying and selling money of the lowest denomination he devotes himself with singleness of purpose. Promising building lots are no temptation to him. He is indifferent to rises and falls in railway shares and as innocent in puts and calls as a frolicsome kid of drawing room etiquette. Nay, it is even rumored that he cares not for even the elysium delights of the Gowanus canal.

cares not for even the elysium delights of the Gowanus canal.

Mr. Smalley buys pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters, half dollars and dollars from churches, banks, and newspaper offices and places of amusement, and sells to big stores, factories, pawn offices, banks and large business houses. A profit of 1 per cent in the dollar on pennies satisfies him as will 75 cents profit on $1,000 in silver. Not often, he says, does he get more. It is in the magnitude of his transactions and not on the per centage that he finds profit. In a year he handles over $3,000,000. He is punctuality personified, and many are the large stores in which the elerks time the hour by his daily arrival, laden with strong bags with pennies and silver.

"Formerly," said Mr. Smalley, with a sigh to the writer, "the profits were much greater, That was when trade dollars were in vogue, but now the business is down very fine and it is not on account of competition."

"Are you not afraid of being robbed."

competition."

"Are you not afraid of being robbed?"

"I was robbed once, but I don't think I will be again. Around the banks robbing is almost impossible. There is no more secure place that I know of. Officer Kelly is a vigilant officer. He has been a long time on his beat and knows strangers at sight, and the character and purpose of every loiterer."

It was on the 7th day of March, 1881, that

It was on the 7th day of March, 1881, that he sole robbery of which Mr. Smalley as the victim, occurred. He had purwas the victim, occurred. He had purchased early in the forenoon, and about a quarter of an hour previous to the robbery, several hundred dollars worth of small money at the Eagle office, and had driven to St. Anne's church, on Front street, near Gold. While waiting a few moments in the pastoral residence for the Rev. Father McMeel, a strange man took advantage of his absence, jumped into the wagon, and, driving off at a furious gallop, escaped pursuit. The robbery created a sensation at the time on account of the audacious manner in which it was effected. W. H. Morris, whose solvinget is "Country Conklin," was a rrested upon suspicion, tried and acquitted. The money amounted to $27, not a cent of which Mr. Smalley recovered.

DEATH FORETOLD BY A CLOCK. It Strikes Twelve When a Member of the Family Is About to Die. "We have not exactly a banshee in our family, who foretells by her wailing an approaching death," said a lady to a Boston correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, "but we have had mysterious warning of such given us time and time again by an old clock which has been in our family for the last 120 years. The our family for the last 120 years. The works were ruined by a shot fired by a British soldier during the revolutionary war at my great-grandfather, which shot, passing entirely through his body, killed him instantly, and then broke the glass deer, penetrating the works, and storning passing entirely through his body, killed him instantly, and then broke the glass door, penetrating the works, and stopping them forever, for, though innumerable attempts have been made to repair them, it seemed that some unknown power kept the clock silent except when death flapped his black wings over the household; so it was banished to the garret.

"The first instance of its warning was when my grandfather died. He had been very ill, but the physicians had at last pronounced him out of danger, and his family were just congratulating themselves on this news when the loud tones of a clock striking 12, slowly and suddenly, like the tolling of a bell, was heard. "Why, what is that?" said my grandmother. There was but one other clock in the house, which was in full view, so it was evident that it was not that one. "It is my father's clock," said her husband. "It has struck the close of my day;" and before they could reach him he was dead, just as the last stroke died away.

"This occurrence was repeated when my grandmother herself lay dying. The old clock struck 12 just as she drew her last breath, and my father, at last believing that there was something supernatural in the affair, had the old works removed, leaving only the hollow case; but a few years after, when my brother was brought home dangerously wounded after the battle of Chancellorsville, the long, slow, solemn tones of the old clock were heard as before, and poor Leon's life went out as they died on the air. They struck for my father and for my little child, who died last year. The clock warned me, in the product of the pr which she had spoken of feeling very well, when I heard the old clock which was in a remote storeroom, strike so rapidly that the notes almost mingled, and then began slowly to strike another twelve strokes. 'My sister is dead,' I said to my husband, 'and has died very suddenly; but who the other strokes are for I cannot imagine.' My husband tried to reason and then to ridicule the idea; but I mourned for my sister as earnestly as though I had seen her die, and when, as I knew I should, I heard the news of her sudden death, I found it had taken place the same day and at the same hour as that on which the clock struck, allowing for the difference of time between Japan and Boston. Her baby, a few hours old, died a few minutes after the mother."

HOW HE PROPOSED.

From the St. Louis Globe-Der I was very much amused at the article published a few days ago on "How Girls Are Proposed To." I think the way I proposed was just as unique and the time and method a little more novel than the

It was a case of love at first sight, but It was a case of love at first sight, but the giri didn't know how I felt, neither was I sure she cared a continental for me. She was a modest, retiring, bashful little thing, and while I wanted to tell her how much I thought of her, I was afraid to. One Sunday night, the fourth time I had called, I made up my mind fully that I wanted her. But she was so shy I thought it would frighten her away if I spoke. About 10 o'clock I proposed a game of cards, and, in a joke, suggested that we play for a wager, and that she put up herself against me. She modestly consented.

I thought I was going to lose, and I knew if I did it was a last chance, even if it was a joke. Well, I won, and told her with a laugh that she belonged to me. After sitting and looking at each other for a few moments I took her hand and said she must always pay her losses, and that the hand I held was mine. She looked at me with a smile and said quietly:

"Well, if you want it you can have it." I won that girl by a game of cards on Sunday, but we neither have regretted the violating of the fourth commandment. Perhaps my method may help some other bashful couple.

Enough to Make a Man Crazy.

From the Washington Star.

A correspondent in the house press gallery is going crazy over this problem: "Did you go to the circus?" some one in-quired of him on Thursday morning. "No," he replied," there was too much of a crowd and I hate crowds. If only one a crowd and I hate crowds. If only one-third of the people went that go now, I would go myself." "Yes," said the other man, "but did it never occur to you that the majority of people are like you, and if only one-third as many went as go now; ten times as many would go as go now? See?" He didn't exactly see, but he caught a faint glimmer, and trying to see is now what is unsettling his mental bal-ance.

The Cologne Plant.

A Savannah firm has on exhibition at their office a new plant in that section. It is a species of the tulip, called the co-logne plant, from the fact that it bears a logne plant, from the fact that it bears a berry about the size of a small nut, which forms when squeezed a drop of liquid that will make a fair-sized bottle of cologne, so powerful is its fragrance. The leaves of the plant are long and lance-shaped. It grows only in the shade and has to be kept very moist. There are probably not more than three or four of the plants in that section.

From the Atlantic Monthly.

Ibsen's youth seems to have been very lonely and sad. He seldom shared the sports of the other boys, or even played with his own brothers and sisters. His most vivid reminiscences of his native town are of the old city hall, with its subterranean jail and a dark and dingy cell in which lunatics were confined; the church, with its associations of gloomy church, with its associations of gloomy piety; the pillory and public wbippingpost, at which criminals and runaway serfs were cruelly scourged. More cheerful memories of his childhood are of the hours which he used to spend in a small room next to the kitchen, poring over old volumes full of engravings. This closet-like retreat could not be heated, and was often fearfully cold; but he could fasten it with a hook inside and shut out all intruders, and this advantage outweighed any considerations of mere physical comfort. The scene in the third act of The Wild Duck, where Hedwig is absorbed in Harryson's History of London, and, not being able to read the text learns what it is all about from the numerous pictures, is one of his youthful recolections.

Outdoor and Indoor Light. The importance of light on health has never been so fully recognized as it is now. The popular conception of the degree or The popular conception of the degree or intensity of light is, however, very inaccurate. Most persons would say that the outside light is two or three times as strong as that within our house. But the ratio of difference is vastly greater. Patients strolling out on the seashore in sunny weather are in a light not two or three times, but 18,000 times stronger than that in an ordinary shaded and curtained from of a city house and the same patients walking along the sunny side of a street are receiving more than 5,000 times as much more of the health giving influence of light as they would receive indoors in the usually heavily curtained room.
