

THE ISLAND OF JERSEY

A Charming Spot by the Sea Where the Weary Find Rest.

A Haven for Tourists and a Veritable Paradise for the Money-moons of Loving Young Couples.

From the Washington Post. I was a child, and she was a child, In this island by the sea;

But we loved with a love, which was more than love,

I and my Anabel Lee.

The exodus from the United States becomes greater every year, and each steamer that leaves our shores will be laden with passengers of every "sort and condition of men" traveling, some on business, some for health, but most of them in search of that most ephemeral blessing, pleasure.

Her Duel With the Doctor. From the Wiener Tagblatt. An extraordinary duel is reported to have taken place in Vienna.

It is difficult to find a new point of interest for such persons, for the historical memorials of Southern are too dreary, the dissatisfactions of Paris upon them, the bathing of Leoville becomes an indecency, the intellectuality of Germany and, au contraire, the whirling windmills of Holland become too wearisome.

For such persons, and to those fortunate beings who are just seeing a new world through the rosy atmosphere of love;

These Quotations Are Revised and Corrected Every Day.

It was one of the Channel island group, lying between the southern coast of England and northern part of France, near Brittany.

Jersey lies more than three thousand miles toward the East, where the morning sun kisses the wavelets of the English Channel, churned into foaming whiteness by the conflicting waters of the Irish Sea and German Ocean.

On that little island, scarcely larger than many a farmstead of our western country, are to be found all things beautiful. The name of Jersey will surely recall the memories of my readers the famous beauty an actress, Mrs. Langtry, who, in her world-wide reputation, bears the pretty title of the "Jersey Lily."

In the old gray church at St. Saviours, on the steep hill above Government House, officiated for many years Mrs. Langtry's father, the Rev. Le Breton, dean of Jersey, and in the stone house in the rear passed the childish days of the golden haired darling, pet and favorite of the six older brothers.

As I said before, in this favored spot are to be found all things beautiful, scenes to inspire painter or poet, whether rugged, lovely or picturesque.

A month snatched from a honeymoon trip, such as a "luncheon" and "museum" by our fashionable belles, would be fraught with ever sweet remembrances.

The numerous bays of this little island, "horned like the moon," the jutting capes of either end rising suddenly, as though to bar the retreat of the emerald tide which daily clasps the golden sand and returns to mingle indistinctly with the brilliant sky, which is of a tint seldom found in this latitude, must excite our admiration.

The interior is mapped with lovely highways, rivaling the green lanes of England, so famous in song and story, and as we drive under the arched and leafy roadways, we come upon many a charming hamlet, nestled around an ancient church, whose crumbling tombstones and ivy-covered towers speak of the generations who have lived and died and now are buried beneath their falling shadows.

The large pastures, where graze the famed Jersey cattle, with their soft brown eyes and sleek, mouse-colored sides, start, fearful of our approach, and tug at the ropes which confine their appetites to a prescribed circle of the luxuriant grass.

The odd-looking French peasantry, too, excite interest, the strange language or patois, "la Jerseyaise," is utterly unintelligible to our untrained ears; but they willingly offer us a draft of rich milk, and gaze in speechless astonishment when we remark that we are Americans, for their ideas of Americans are mainly connected with the wigwag and wampum.

To the dwellers in the island, whose history is so new, as to be almost within the memory of living man—the ancient story of this tiny place seems wonderful. To climb the crumbling steps of Mont Orgueil castle, and while overlooking from its battlements, the adjacent coast of France, the quiet bay and harbor, the breezy commons and peaceful surroundings of midsummer life, recall the fierce battles that have raged upon those slopes, where unsuccessful leaders were taken prisoners and placed to die a miserable death of starvation and exposure within sight of their friends in the cages which still hang high above our heads upon the castle walls.

And we can fancy how softly Bonnie Prince Charlie "creeped" in the midnight darkness down the flight of steps where is moored now, as then, a tiny rowboat, wherein waited a poor sailor boy, who, at the risk of torture and death, carried him in safety to his anxious friends on the opposite coast of France.

And, as in many such ancient castles, are the dark cells, the noisome dungeons, where the toad and lizard dart from under our lingering footsteps, as we think of the weary lives dragged out in anguish and passed here into the liberty of death.

And, as of old, the waves dash angrily against the ramparts, built upon a foundation of rock, by Julius Caesar, in protest, as nature has ever protested, against the cruelty of man.

In the Princess' Tower, another historical remnant, are the rooms and tomb of Geoffrey, the English, who destroyed the Dragon, which ravaged the sheepfolds and shriveled up the crops of the terrified villagers with his flaming breath. There are painted glass windows in good preservation containing portraits of the famous Geoffrey and his wife, Anne of Bretagne.

Some persons think the story of this knight was adapted in the well-known representation of the English emblem of valor, "St. George and the Dragon."

The lower part of this building contains the combined kitchen and dining-hall, wherein is the immense fireplace where turned the spit for many a jolly feast in olden days.

There are many other places of great antiquity, some dating back even to the days of the Druids, most of them in a state of tolerable preservation.

To one of our observant nation the great charm of this little place will be found in the fact that, although so small, it contains so much. 'Tis "Multum in parvo" in verity!

A poet will find occupation for many a day in the wealth of legend known to this primitive people; an artist could paint forever amidst these marvels of color and atmospheric effect; and an antiquarian can enjoy the endless pleasure of research. It is an ideal resort; the band, the pier, the bathing, and the gay little town of St. Helier offer everything necessary for pastime and pleasure.

Her Duel With the Doctor. From the Wiener Tagblatt. An extraordinary duel is reported to have taken place in Vienna.

An extraordinary duel is reported to have taken place in Vienna. A few days ago a girl aged 19 challenged a young doctor, who had offended one of her friends and refused to apologize.

He was challenged in the usual way by two seconds, a student and an officer of reserves, and when he ridiculed the idea the girl threatened to horsehip him publicly.

The challenge was then accepted, and a meeting, with seconds and doctors, took place in a hired room in a Vienna suburb.

All the rules for a duel with swords were strictly observed. The doctor first acted on the defensive, but was soon obliged to fight in earnest, and left off after the second round with a wound in the left side, which was declared not to be dangerous.

The girl, a Croatian, educated in South America, is said by the seconds to be the best fencer they ever saw. After wounding her adversary she left the place without casting another look at him.
