

HELD TO THE GRAND JURY

Stoddard. No Certificate to Practice Medicine in Montana.

Some Tall Swearing in the Justice's Court-The Stoddards Appear to Have Been Mixed in the Shuffle.

By the Standard's Special Wire.

BUTTE, July 30.—The examination of James Stoddard for unlawfully practicing medicine, begun last week, was concluded before Judge Eddy to-night. Dr. Leavitt of the state medical board, was introduced by the prosecution for the purpose of proving that the defendant had no certificate from the board, permitting him to practice. The witness said that the defendant had applied to him for such certificate repeatedly, but that it had been refused.

Mr. Bruce, who appears to act in the rather anomalous position of brevet doctor and storehouse keeper for the Liebig outfit, was the only witness introduced for the defense. His evidence was calculated to refute that of the man Jones examined for the prosecution at the beginning of the trial. Bruce testified that the defendant was connected with the California branch of the Liebig dispensary for a long time, and that in connection with the office in Butte, it being E. C. Stoddard who was manager of the local institution. Continuing the witness said that he was in the office the day Jones called and did not see the defendant write any prescription for him. Jones had called, Bruce said, and stated his case, whereupon he, Bruce, agreed to write a description of it to the San Francisco branch which would in return forward a mode of treatment for Jones' complaint. Jones was not examined by the defendant, and the defendant knew nothing about the case.

Here the contract held by Jones from the Liebig dispensary and which acknowledged that for $100 for medicines furnished and to be furnished, the dispensary would treat Jones until cured, was shown by Dr. Stoddard, who was shown the witness. He said he did not know who signed it, but was sure it was not the defendant as he was not in the room when Jones exhibited the paper. In the opinion of the witness the paper was signed in the San Francisco office.

The witness then volunteered the statement that the dispensary kept no resident physician in this city, that when patients presented themselves at the office he, Bruce, would examine them and then explain their cases by letter to the San Francisco house who would give them their long range treatment.

A. C. Stoddard was to have visited Butte but being unable to do so had written to him that his brother, James Stoddard, who was a regular graduate, would come in his place. The advertisement of Stoddard relative to his arrest at Missoula and his intention to sue certain parties for heavy damages, was then shown the witness by Mr. Stapleton. Bruce said he opined that A. C. Stoddard was the author of the advertisement, but that the defendant was the one whom it was said would be in Butte. Here some very lively cross firing ensued between opposing counsel relative to the admission as evidence of the advertisement, which was ended by the court ruling it to be admissible.

The cross-examination revealed great reticence on the part of the witness to testify to certain matters which appeared to be damaging to the defendant, but who was very ready with his replies on matters not calculated to be so. He reiterated his direct testimony that the defendant neither examined Jones nor prescribed for him.

In rebuttal Jones was recalled and with a great show of earnestness declared that Stoddard had not only prescribed for him but had also examined him as to the nature of ailment and then described how the examination was made. According to the witness, aside from the physical portion of it, the principal part of the examination consisted of asking him about his ability to pay for his treatment. This proving satisfactory a contract was then signed by which Stoddard agreed to cure the witness for the sum of $100. The medicine he had received, witness said, was prepared in the office after a prescription had been furnished by Stoddard, and not a proprietary article as testified to by Bruce.

Bruce was recalled and denied everything testified to by Jones. Stoddard did not take the stand.

This concluding the testimony, Mr. Halden, of counsel for the defense, raised the question of jurisdiction, was overruled by the court, and the case was then argued on its merits. The court announced that he would hold the defendant to the grand jury in the sum of $500.

BROWN FOX AT ST. PAUL.

A Fine Description of a Marvelously Close and Exciting Race.

From the St. Paul Dispatch, July 30.—When the first bell rang for the third race of the day, the Carnival stakes, there was a murmur of excitement all over the grounds. It began in the betting ring and spread to the stand, where every man had a favorite among the bunch of handsome 2-year-olds, and was aching to get his money up. There were seven starters, as clean built a lot of colts as ever went away at the tap of a drum. Marcus Daly's rangy colt, Brown Fox, named for his color, was first favorite in the betting at odds of 2 to 1. Sir Abner was pretty freely bought at 3 to 1, and Mountjoy had friends at 4 to 1. The odds against the McGuigan stable's entry, Chimes and Linlithgow were 5 to 1 coupled, while Donatello sold at 4, and Letcher's brown colt, Harry Ray, started under odds of 10 to 1. Brown Fox was the talk from early morning until the bugler sent them down to the start. Brown Fox, the good one, was a snail, and knowing enough to bet a million, but in a field of untried youngsters it didn't look good enough for the crowd, and the brown colt carried but little money. There was some time lost at the post, Sir Abner breaking away and acting badly, but at last they came down in a bunch and were sent away in as pretty a start as ever a man gazed on. Down past the stand, through the gauntlet of a howling multitude, Francis cracking Mountjoy along at first place a length from Donatello at second, with Chimes, under young Eilke, at his girth, and Harry Ray tailing the bunch. "Bet you $50 the stable runs one two," yelled a sport in loud checks and patent leathers, as McGuigan's chestnut Chimes pulled out of the bunch and stole the lead from Mountjoy. Davis was lunging Linlithgow up on the outside at a cracking pace, and the offer of the loudly-dressed youth met with no response. As they neared the quarter Tompkins leaned forward and whispered a request in Donatello's ear. The chestnut shook his head in assent and went ahead like a flash past Mountjoy, Chimes and Linlithgow, and led them at the quarter by a half a length. "It's anybody's race," yelled a dozen men in chorus, and the youth in the checks, who favored the stable's entry hadn't a word to say. Here they come to the second quarter, with Donatello still leading by less than a length from Chimes, Sir Abner third by a neck, Brown Fox, under a pull, third, the field right at their heels, and Harry Ray still tailing the bunch. Now for the stretch. They make the turn under a blanket, Sir Abner a nose ahead of Donatello, who is under the whip; Brown Fox creeping up, and the field still in the race. The roar from the stand and about the fences is deafening. "It's anybody's race," reiterates the talent, as they get down to business for the run home, every horse under whip and spur, and every one a possible winner. Sir Abner leads ten lengths from home, with Donatello second by a neck, and Brown Fox coming right up alongside him at third. "Look at that crazy Fox! See that horse come, will you?" Brown Fox wins in a canter. "I'll lay a thousand to twenty on Brown Fox," broke out the game sport in big checks, who had abandoned the stable and picked a winner ten lengths from home. At that point Williams called on his mount for the effort of his life, and the colt made it. Never was a grander spectacle presented in a horse race than in the last half dozen leaps by the winner of the Carnival stakes. Tompkins tied the whip like a flem in earnest and the delicate shoulders of the chestnut Donatello were flecked with blood and foam, but he had run his race. Bravely did he try, as he felt his rival's breath close at hand; gallantly he struggled to keep his position, but to no purpose. Like a black shadow the Fox went by him, and won the big stake by half a length, with Sir Abner third by less than half a neck, Mountjoy fourth, Linlithgow fifth, Chimes sixth, and Harry Ray in the rear. It was as pretty a race as ever was run anywhere, as close a finish and as hard fought. The race of the meeting so far.

A TOUGH INDIAN TO KILL.

He is Left Twenty Times for Dead, Still He Fights.

The blow of a bullet will ordinarily paralyze so many nerves and muscles of a white man as to knock him down, even though no vital part be hit. The Indian gives little heed to such wounds, and to "drop him in his tracks" the bullet must reach the brain, the heart or the spine. I have seen an Indian go off with two bullets through his body," writes Colonel Dodge, "within an inch or two of the spine, the only effect of which was to cause him to change his gait from a run to a dignified walk."

A cavalry force of some twenty-five men surprised a small party of Indians in a thick chaparral, through which, however, there were numerous glades and openings. The Indians scattered at once, and the soldiers separated in pursuit. After some time, when the cessation of firing indicated that the affair was over, the commander had the recall sounded. Soon one and then another came in, until the whole command was assembled, when, to the gratification of the officer, almost every man claimed to have killed an Indian. They went to collect the bodies. On reaching the first one it was found that nearly every soldier claimed to have killed him.

A sergeant dismounted and approached the body. The prostrate Indian rose up and dealt a vicious blow with his knife, which the sergeant barely escaped. When the Indian was finally killed it was discovered that he had not less than twenty wounds. One bullet, probably the first one, had broken his hip and thrown him from his horse. After that he had shot at every soldier that passed near him, attracting attention and being "killed" again and again, only to rise up and fight the next soldier that came along. Instead of twenty Indians the soldiers found one.
