BLUE GRASS PATIENCE.

A Kentuckian Who Thirsted for Vengeance But Was Content to Wait.

From the Philadelphia Times.
About noon one August day, in company with a native, I started on horseback from Manchester, Ky., for a ride up country. About six miles out of town we struck the cabin of a backwoodsman situated on the outskirts of a dense forest. The owner was seated on a small barrel just outside the door, handling an old musket, which he rested on his knee as we drove up.

"Howdy, Dave?" queried my guide.
"To be sure, Dave," replied Dave.
"Shinin' up?" again asked my guide.
"Yep, Gon' to use it fore long."
"Hu! Won't say. What's up?"
"Hain't seed John Cracker round any whar have ye?" asked Dave, ignoring the question.

"No, Lo-kin' for 'im?"
"Sorer. That's what fur I'm shinin' up" (cleansing his gun).
"See-kin' to shoot?"
"Gone not, 'elected my guide."
"What's the trouble?"
"Nuthin' much. John he said I wusn't with a gill o' whisky and then 'e wudden woe for me to let 'em live." (I afterward found out that Dave had been defeated for the office of sheriff.)

"Goin' to kill?"
"Hain't decided yet; mebbe. John he's a gentleman but consarns me if I'll let any man slander my character."
"Gone not," echoed my guide.
"Not as long as I kin pull this trigger."
"Well, Dave, I reckon weusn't 'e goin' to," resumed the guide. "Be you goin' to hunt for John?"
"Eckon I'll wait for 'm to pass byar."
"Shall I tell 'm?"
"Reckon you mout es well of you see 'm. Don't matter much, howsumever. I kin wait."
"Et I see 'm I'll tell 'm you're watchin' for 'm."
"All right."
"Good by. Hope you come out safe."
"Hope so," answered Dave. "Will ef this darned reepon don't kick."
"Good by."
"Bye."
And we rode off.

That was months ago, and John and Dave are both in the land of the living yet. But Dave is still watching.

HATS THE WORD "RATS."

How Some Fierce Rodents Turned the Tables on a Smart Alick.
From the Lewiston Journal.

A farmer in western Maine called Joe Thompson was seriously troubled by rats. He first provided himself with a stout leather bag of the capacity of four bushels. He then placed an empty hoghead in his log house, leaving the bunghole open, through which he dropped a small quantity of meat scraps and crumbs of bread.

Bag in hand, he retired outside to watch proceedings, peering through a small crevice between the logs. Presently he espied an old, gray veteran approaching the bunghole. He takes a peep, then sniffs, looks cautiously about and then enters. He soon disappears from the hoghead and quickly reappears. In a trice he returns, followed by a drove amounting to hundreds, which, one by one disappear through the bunghole.

Joe skipped nimbly through the door and adjusted the open mouth of the bag to the small aperture, at the same time rapping the hoghead with the toe of his boot, which produced a loud, ringing sound. With loud squeals and fierce struggles the frightened rats began to scramble through the bunghole, all landing in the bottom of the bag. His first thought was to drown them by sinking the bag in the pond, but being in a rather game mood, as was often the case, he concluded to put the bag in his boat, and after rowing a good distance from the shore then release them, and with his oar had a good time knocking them in the head.

Rowing out several yards from the shore, and being in high glow at the thought of wreaking vengeance on the "varmints" which had given him so much trouble, he, without hesitation, untied the bag, expecting to see the frightened creatures at once leap into the water, but he quickly found himself mistaken.

Instead of fleeing, or even retreating, the rats charged in a body, and with teeth and claws so severely lacerated his face, neck and hands as to cause him to leap from the boat and swim for the shore, leaving the craft in the possession of his one-time victims.

The Ups and Downs of Life.
Robert Louis Stevenson.
To be suddenly snuffed out in the middle of ambitious schemes, is tragical enough at best, but when a man has been grudging himself his own life in the meanwhile, and saving up everything for the festival that never was to be, it becomes that hysterically moving sort of tragedy which lies on the confines of farce. The victim is dead—and he has cunningly overreached himself; a combination of calamities more the less absurd for being grim. To husband a favorite elixir until the batch turns sour is not at all an artful stroke of policy; and how much more with a whole cellar—a whole bodily existence! People may lay down their lives with cheerfulness in the sure expectation of a blessed immortality; but that is a different affair from giving up youth with all its admirable pleasures, in the hope of a better quality of grain in a more than problematical, may, more than improbable, life.

We should not complain a hungry man who should refuse a whole dinner and reserve all his appetite for the desert, before he knew whether there was to be any desert or not. If there be such a thing as imprudence in the world we surely have it here. We sail in leaky bottoms and on great and perilous waters and to take a cure from the doctor and naval ballad we have heard the mermaids ringing, and know that we shall never see dry land any more. Old and young, we are all on our last cruise. If there is a bill of tobacco among the crew, for God's sake pass it round and let us have a pipe before we die.

Self Discipline.
From the Cincinnati Enquirer.
"Al Burton, the great gambler, who I see by an article in the Enquirer, has quit backing his judgment with his money, is a peculiar man," said a well known traveling man yesterday. "He is a great big fellow, over 6 feet and weighing over 200 pounds. One of his peculiarities is punishing himself when he loses his money or does anything that after-thought suggests to his mind as foolish. I remember a story I heard some time ago. Burton had been playing faro bank and had his room, and the man who occupied the next room declared that he spent the balance of the night marching up and down and at every step swearing at himself something after this fashion: 'You thought you knew all about faro, didn't you? You—fool, that's what you are,' and so on. Finally he laid himself out on the table, folded his arms and rolled off on the floor. This is a favorite way he has of punishing himself, and, being such a large man, is doubtless very effective."

The Kentuckian Abroad.
From the Oil City Blizzard.
Say what they will, I'll still be stuck on "Old Blue Grass" 'n' old Kentucky; No state like her this yearning fills— With all her faults I love her still.

A TESTIMONIAL.

The names of persons who are withheld but, in many instances I have permission to furnish the address on condition of privacy.

No letter or names will be published without the consent of the writer.

Read the following letter:
Local Address, Butte, Mont., Jan. 29, 1889.—CARR, SCHULTZ, M. D., Butte, Mont.—Dear Sir: For the benefit of anyone suffering from any form of private disease, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your medicine, produced the causing loss of manhood, and the nervous system broken down, I am ready at any time to prove the statement I have made.

I had been suffering for a great many years from seminal weakness and loss of manhood. I was taking treatment from a great many local doctors for my disease without getting any benefit from it. I also tried a good many American specialists and was also failed to cure me. I was suffering so long from my terrible disease. Once I picked up a little paper and noticed the circular doctor had a specialty of this kind of disease.

I gave up in despair and in my mad insanity from suffering so long from my terrible disease. Then I made up my mind to try one more and see if I could not be cured. I then stated my case to the European doctor. I soon got an answer, saying he would cure me if I would come up to see him personally, and he would. Dr. Schultz examined me from head to foot and put me under his treatment. In a few days after taking the new remedy from Dr. Schultz, I felt like a new man, and following the treatment for four or five months I found myself cured. Then I got married, and I am now living a happy life. I feel as well as ever I did in my life and have no signs of my old disease. I am, Doctor, ready and willing at any time to meet you, my best friend, and will recommend you wherever I possibly can. Yours respectfully, D. W. C. F. I can furnish a thousand testimonials of the same kind concerning my specialty.
