HE SHOT HOP'S HAND

Chinamen Engage in a Quiet Bit of a Shindy.

WITH AXES AND PISTOLS

The Celestials Keep the Facts All to Themselves—But the Story is Out and Here it is.

There is a mystery down in Chinatown that the celestials are guarding with great care. A few days ago a physician was summoned to dress a wound on the hand of Hop Wai Lung...

When asked how large was the bore of the gun with which he shot himself the mongolian would not answer. When asked to show the gun he refused and finally said he didn't have the gun, that it belonged to another Chinaman.

Not much more was thought of the affair until yesterday when a Chinaman who was assisting a lady at her house-work excused himself from duty about 3 o'clock saying he had to go home, his "boy" was sick.

A STANDARD reporter visited several places in Chinatown last night and tried to find out how Hop Lung's hand came to be used as a target. But most of the almond-eyed pigtailed who were approached upon the subject were, or professed to be, densely ignorant about the matter.

Charlie Wan was more communicative however. He admitted that Hop and another Chinaman had a dispute about a week ago in a Chinese resort and that Hop had gone out to the rear of the place and obtained an axe with which he attacked the other fellow, whose name—as near as the reporter could make out from the tea-chest lingo of Charlie—was Sam H. Sam objected to being carved with an axe and ran to a shelf in the rear room of the place and grabbed up a revolver and shot Hop as he entered the door with the axe upraised.

The ball struck the Chinaman's hand as it grasped the handle of the chopper. The other Chinamen then interfered and prevented any further progress of the hostilities.

This is undoubtedly a true statement of the affair. The Chinamen became frightened after the shooting, and to guard against arrest they arranged to have Hop tell the story about shooting himself.

"INCOG" TO-NIGHT.

The Greatest Theatrical Company That Has Visited us This Year.

To-night the George W. Lederer company headed by Charles Dickson will present "Incog" at Evans' opera house. The magnificent company, the success which the play has achieved elsewhere and the prominence of the star has caused great interest among the theatre goers of this city and one of the largest and most select audiences ever gathered together in this city will undoubtedly be present on this occasion.

"Incog" will be preceded by a 20 minute curtain raiser from the French entitled "Book III, Chapter I," a dainty, airy trifling in which Messrs. Dickson, Edson and Miss Burg will appear. Altogether this performance will probably be the most finished and artistic comedy seen in this city in many months.

"Incog" has already taken Indianapolis, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake and San Francisco by storm, it being necessary during its two weeks' engagement in the latter city to take out the orchestra, fill every available space with campstools, and turn hundreds away. It comes to us fresh from its San Francisco triumphs.

"The Italy of America."

Southern California has very truthfully been called. In the dry, pure, vital air of Southern California the strong feel a trebled joy in life, while the weak and suffering are builded up, renewed and strengthened in a perfectly marvelous manner. The soft and balmy air, the prodigious profusion of flowers, the magnificent display of fruits, the luxury of sea bathing, the beautiful walks, drives and excursions which everywhere invite the traveler combine to make this southern summer land a veritable dream of enjoyment, and this, too, at the time of year when his eastern home is fast bound in the icy grasp of winter. Here the flowers are in bloom and summer clothing may be worn with comfort.

The arrangements for this fall and winter's traveling by the Union Pacific, "The Original Overland Route," and the Southern Pacific are absolutely perfect. Yosemite valley, the giant trees of Mariposa and Calaveras, Monterey, the queen of America's watering places, and the great city of San Francisco are all at their best, and the whole trip over the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific roads is the supreme luxury of railway traveling.

DISAPPOINTED DETECTIVES.

The Removal of Gambler Turned Out to Be One Police Lieutenant.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

The night was dark and dismal, and the rain was coming down in torrents. No one was on the street save a few drenched hackmen, who stood in doorways near their vehicles, trying to get a little shelter from the rain. Now and then above the patter of the rain on the sidewalk a policeman's club could be heard disturbing the stillness of the night. The clocks had just struck midnight when four forms could be seen walking up Vine street. They had no umbrellas, but they did not appear to pay any attention to the heavy rain. When Sixth street was reached the men were recognized as Detectives Hudson, Bulmer and Witte and Officer Wilmeyer. They stopped on the corner for a moment and Bulmer said: "Well, who will we try to get to-night?" "Anybody," says Witte.

Just then the door of a restaurant opened and a messenger boy came out carrying a big tray of dishes. "Alas," says Bulmer, "a lunch for a poker game." "Right you are," says Hudson; "we will follow."

The messenger went down Vine street. "It's on. It's for Captain Carr's game. We will get them again," said Bulmer. "Guess you must be right," says Wilmeyer, the boy detective.

But the messenger passed that game, and Hudson said: "You're wrong. That lunch is for the Annex."

"We will get that game at last," remarked Bulmer. The boy continued down Vine to Fifth and turned east. He stopped for a moment on the corner of Lodge, then went on.

"Wrong again. I'm on now. It's going to the Gibson," says Bulmer. The boy, however, passed the Gibson, and Wilmeyer said: "I'll bet my life it's for the Dennison."

But it was not. The boy kept on. The rain was coming down harder than ever. It made no difference to the coppers. They were out for big game.

Over Fourth street the boy went, paying no attention to anyone. Not even to the rain. He crossed Main and then there was excitement.

"Is it possible that the St. James people are sending to Vine street for lunch?" remarked Hudson. The boy turned down Hammond street and the four men sighed.

"We will get it now. He's going in the rear way," remarked Bulmer. Suddenly the boy disappeared.

"Where did he go?" everyone whispered. "I didn't see," said Witte. "He must have dropped in a hole," said Wilmeyer.

"I wish I had my sneaks," remarked Bulmer. "I'll find out," said Witte. Then he disappeared down Hammond street in the darkness, Bulmer going with him. They returned in a minute.

The other two men jumped out of a hallway. "Did you find him?" they whispered. "No," said Hudson. "He'll get on."

"Who?" asked Witte, anxiously. "Who is it?" "Don't give it away. Lieut. Pete Berg." A moment later four men, as wet as river rats, could be seen walking down Fourth street. They spoke not to each other as they trudged along.

At Central avenue they walked into a large hall way. And the rain pattered on the roofs and sidewalks.
