About 6:20 o'clock this evening the car boy, noticing the draw at the bottom of the chute, opened what appeared to be the body of a man.

He at once notified a man named Mulcahy, who was working on the same level, and together they returned to the chute opening and pulled out the lifeless bodies of Burns and Shea.

The bodies were taken to the surface as quickly as possible and removed to Sherman's morgue, where they were viewed by Acting Coroner Muldoon.

Dr. Munroe also examined the bodies and found that Burns' neck was broken, while Shea's death was caused by concussion of the brain, caused by his forehead striking against some sharp and hard object—probably the corner of a rock.

His left shoulder is also fractured, which would indicate that he struck on his head with great force. From the injuries sustained and from the appearance of the bodies, Dr. Munroe is of the opinion that they both fell into the mine head first.

There are several theories suggested as to how the accident occurred. One is that the men were working right on the edge of the chute and one of them lost his balance and, in falling, pulled the other along with him.

Another is that the waste on which they were standing suddenly gave way and carried them both down to death. It is known, however, that Burns was subject to fits, and the most probable theory seems to be that he suddenly went into convulsions, and that either he pulled his partner down or that Shea fell in while trying to save him.

It is not known how far they fell, but it was probably about 100 feet, as it is thought that the shaft must have been half full, or perhaps a little over.

Neither is it known at just what time the accident happened, but it must have been some time during the forenoon. At noon, the men's lunches were brought to them as usual, but as they were not in sight, the boys supposed that they had gone off somewhere to talk with some of the other men and they put the buckets down near the top of the chute, where they were found this evening with their contents untouched.

The men were both unmarried. Shea was 19 years old and was a son of John Shea of Centerville. He had been working around the mine only a short time, but was full of enthusiasm in his work and had a great desire to become an expert miner. After being prepared for burial, the body of the unfortunate young man was removed to his saddened home this evening.

Burns was about 45 years of age and boarded at the McGreen house, corner of Quartz and Wyoming streets. He was unmarried, and if he had any relatives, nothing is known concerning their whereabouts. He was an old-time miner on the Pacific coast, and came to Butte about three years ago from Eureka, Nev. It is thought that he has a brother living in San Francisco, and an effort will be made to locate him.

In no way can the blame be attached to the company for this lamentable affair. It was one of those accidents which no human power can guard against, as has been abundantly proven during the last few days. Larry Doyle stated this evening that he formerly worked at the chute and would have been working there today had he not been put at some other work this morning. He says that he noticed the men working there a few days ago. They had the chute full then and were standing on top of it pulling the waste down toward them.

He considered their position a very dangerous one from the fact that the slide at the bottom might be opened at any minute and let them down 15 or 20 feet and probably kill them. He advised them to get out on the surface and told them that he would not stand where they were for $10,000, but they laughed it off and said they were all right. An inquest will be held by Acting Coroner Muldoon at 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.
