HENDERSON IS INSANE

The Sad Condition of the Well-Known Deputy Court Clerk.

SOFTENING OF THE BRAIN

He Has Been Afflicted for Some Time, But Recently His Malady Developed Violence-Taken to Warm Springs.

Cornelius V., better known as "Teed" Henderson, who for more than three years has been one of the deputy clerks of the district court, was yesterday morning adjudged insane and was in the afternoon taken to the asylum at Warm Springs. The case is a peculiarly pitiful one, as the unfortunate man is but 31 years old and his malady is a hopeless one. For nearly a year it has been apparent that his mind was giving way from softening of the brain, and lately instances have been recalled that indicate that he has not been altogether right for years. He is a stepson of Judge Galbraith, who some years ago presided on the bench in Silver Bow county, and was a clerk under him. When H. A. Neidenhofen was elected clerk of the courts he appointed Mr. Henderson as one of his deputies and assigned him as clerk of Department I, the most important of the clerkships, and he served there for two years, but his actions became so erratic and his memory so faulty that it was necessary for him to be removed to an important position. His condition, however, became gradually worse, and for the last five or six months he was retained on the office force only out of consideration for his wife and child, who were dependent upon his salary for support, but he was not given any responsible work to do. For several months he has in some respects been as helpless, and has had little control over himself as a child. He has always been allowed his freedom and never exhibited any evidence of violence until last Saturday, when he was taken with the delusion that his wife intended to injure him, and he came down to the court house and attempted to borrow a revolver and threatened he would kill her. When he found he could not get a revolver he returned home and procured a hatchet, which he carried around with him. His wife became alarmed and sent for assistance. Mr. Neidenhofen, who had been doing a great deal for his stricken clerk, employed a man to stay with him. Dr. Johnson was called to see him, and it was determined that it would be unsafe to longer permit him to be at large and a complaint was filed against him and he was examined before Judge McHatton yesterday morning by Drs. Johnston and McDonald.

J. H. Jackson, who had guarded Henderson for several days, and H. A. Neidenhofen and J. A. Prickett were examined as witnesses. Henderson was also questioned and made rambling and hesitating answers. When asked what he wanted a revolver for, he said to protect himself against the doctor. Soon after the examination he was taken to Warm Springs by Deputy Sheriff Walton, accompanied by J. F. Wilkins. Aside from his wife and child, Henderson has no relatives in the state. His mother lives in Florida and his stepfather somewhere on the coast. He also has a brother in New York.

AN INDIAN CAPTIVE.

He Has Traveled in Foreign Countries and is Going Home. John Captain, the only Flathead Indian who ever went to see and took in the sights of foreign countries, was a passenger on yesterday morning's west-bound train. He carried the remaining sections of a through ticket from Washington to Tacoma, and during the short stop that the train made in Butte he expressed gratification that the time was short until he would greet his fellow tribesman on the Puyallup reservation. For more than a year John's friends and relatives have thought him dead. They will not be surprised at his return, however, as they were communicated with before the Assistant Indian Commissioner Smith would believe the story that John told or would furnish him with the means of getting back to his people. John is the captain or the chief of the Duwamish or Flathead Indians. He is not overwise, and appears to be about 25 years old. During the past year he has had an experience that will serve to raise him to the rank of his father, in spite of his lack of wits. He speaks fairly good English of a remarkable character, as it was picked up partly from sailors and partly from tramps with whom John had consorted for several months. His story is verified by the papers he has from various American consuls in foreign countries and by letters from the Indian department. He related his adventures to a reporter yesterday afternoon.

He was "shanghaied" or kidnapped, and taken aboard a sailing vessel bound for Hamburg in March, 1888. He had been to a dance near Tacoma and got drunk. He remembers that the next thing he remembers is waking up on board of a ship almost out of sight of land. He says he attempted to jump overboard and was locked up for several days. When he was given his liberty he was made to do the scullion work in the cook's galley. And everybody on board the ship took particular delight in kicking him whenever opportunity offered. He thinks that the captain of the ship intended to sell him as a wild Indian, for he was locked up when Hamburg was reached. He managed to get out of the hold and, jumping overboard, swam ashore. John secured work on a truck farm near Hamburg for a while, but was paid no wages, so he applied to the consul from this country and asked to be sent home. The consul gave him letters to consuls in Great Britain and secured for him a passage on a ship for Liverpool. The consul there would not listen to his tale of woe and the Indian became an English tramp and walked to London. He made a little money with a hanky-panky showman, who exhibited him as a savage from the jungles of America. When he got to London he reached Consul General Collins, and was given passage on a ship bound for Mobile, Ala.

On arriving in Mobile he had no money and no idea in which direction he ought to travel to get back to the reservation, so he joined a gang of tramps and spent the winter in the South with them. Three weeks ago he reached Washington. He knew he would be all right if he could get the ear of the great father, but he could get none of the department clerks to listen to him. One night about two weeks ago, when he was nearly starved, he went to a police station and told his story. The sergeant in charge was a kindly man and thought there might be something in his story, so he reported the case to the Assistant Indian Commissioner Smith, John. His story was well known and was given a suit of clothes and provided with transportation home, the cost of which will be deducted from his yearly allowance. John was rather blue about this, for he knew that he would have a couple of years of starvation before he would be reached home.

John is a typical coast Indian, and his head is flattened after the fashion of his people, who change the shape of the head of the child by strapping the infant to a board. And his experience as a tramp has sharpened his Indian instinct to beg. He was sadly in need of cigarettes and something to drink, and he was not bashful about asking for what he wanted.

"Pudd'nhead Wilson" The play in which Frank Mayo will appear at Maguire's opera house Thursday evening, is a story of life in a Missouri village previous to the war of the rebellion, that told of a misunderstood old village lawyer who for 25 years waited patiently for that client that never came, because his neighbors who failed to fashion his eccentricity, had good-humoredly nicknamed him a "pudd'nhead," and for 25 years he patiently, good-naturedly and pathetically waits for the recognition of his merits. At last he forces on them the vindication of a theory of thumb marks being a physical signature and the way, which was well known and acknowledged in many parts of the world long before the days of this quaint old Missouri lawyer. There were interchanged babies by which a white child grew up a slave and a thirty-second-part negro grew up the master; there was thieving in the village and at length an attempted murder, in which the murderer left the bloody imprint of his thumb upon the ivory handle of the dagger, and all of these mysteries are at last cleared up and the guilt brought home to where it belongs by a comparison of the bloody imprint upon the handle of the dagger, with the thumb marks of "Dave Wilson" as gathered from the balls of the thumbs of his neighbors in all those years while they have been calling him a "pudd'nhead."

This is the story of which Frank Mayo has made a play, in which he impersonates the title role. The play has been a most unqualified success, first in New York, at the Herald Square theater, and since that in all the large cities of the states. The play is said to share the popularity of the "Old Homestead" and "Shore Acres." It is of that quiet realistic character creating style of the plays before mentioned. "Dave Wilson" known as "Pudd'nhead," is said to be interesting in Mr. Mayo's hands as in "Nathaniel Berry" or "Joshua Whitcomb."

CHASING A FUGITIVE

Deputy Sheriff Eray Runs His Prisoner Into a Prospect Hole.

HE'S IN THE DUNGEON NOW

One of the Chain Gang in the Stockade Attempts to Escape and the Race Entertains Dublin Gulch Denizens.

Another county chain gang prisoner made a desperate but unsuccessful attempt to escape yesterday. The prisoner was William, alias "Shorty" Jones, who was sent up recently for 90 days and a fine of $100 for petty larceny. Jones was taken out with the other prisoners yesterday morning, in charge of Deputy Sheriff Bray, the tall boy. After the stockade gates had been closed on the gang Jones made an excuse to get some tools and walked over to the north side where a grindstone was standing by the fence. Quick as a flash he was up and over and Bray only saw a streak of Jones. The deputy sheriff did not follow the prisoner over the fence but lost a great deal of time in running to the gate on the south side and then around the stockade, but his long legs came in right handy and the way they limbered around the block and up Dublin gulch was a caution. He was compelled to drop his double-barreled shotgun and resort to his big hip pocket cannon. Jones had several hundred yards the start of Bray, but he didn't hold his lead very long and the result proved that he wasn't in it with the deputy as a long distance sprinter. The race was a wild one and a great event to the denizens of Dublin gulch. Women and children cheered the chased and the chaser and the latter began shooting into the air. "Stop, or I'll shoot," he yelled. "Shoot and be—," yelled Jones. Bray, however, was afraid he'd hit somebody on the west side of town and preferred to run his man down. The race continued for something considerable less than five miles and took them beyond the range of the people on the west side and Bray again threatened to shoot. Jones feared the deputy might keep his word and dropped into a prospect hole, where he was captured and taken to the county jail and locked up in the dungeon as a punishment for not getting away.

AT LAST

The people of Butte have at last found a place where they can buy men's wear as low, if not lower, than the same goods are usually sold for in the great business centers of the East.

The stranger in the city naturally wonders why so many people go in and out of the little store on the corner of Main and West Park streets. But after he has examined the line of men's goods shown by this house and compared the prices with what is asked for the same goods elsewhere, he at once comes to the conclusion that "The Cash Clothing Company" is selling the best goods at lower prices than any other house in Butte, and he no longer wonders when he sees the crowds that daily throng, not only the Main street entrance to this house, but the Park street entrance as well.

All day long the staff of employees in this house is kept busy waiting on the eager customers who know good values when they see them.

When passing the corner of Main and West Park streets don't fail to glance into the windows or showcases of "The Cash Clothing Company," where you will see at all times the best values in men's wear to be had on earth.
