The junior lien created by the Kemper mortgage became the senior lien and took precedence over the judgment. Ten days were granted to file an amended answer.

Among other matters heard was a motion to relax the costs in the case of the Bennett Bros. company against C. E. Congdon. The plaintiffs claimed as part of their cost $69 paid out for court stenographer's fees, and the question of the value of stenographers' services was involved and a number of witnesses were examined. Another question was whether such expenses could properly be put in as costs. The court took the matter under advisement.

Judge Lindsay set the following cases for trial: Feb. 14—Frank Stephens vs. A. B. McLean, J. S. McCormick vs. Michael A. Corcoran, L. L. Paget vs. James S. Galloway.

Feb. 15—Independent Publishing Company vs. R. Koene, A. Steinhorn & Co. vs. R. M. Davidson; Pioneer Fuel Company vs. James H. Lynch et al., G. Joseph Lazzari vs. Achille Petrusci.

Feb. 16—E. C. Malone vs. Frank Hyatt, Daniel Scaries vs. James Brown et al., C. W. Brega vs. J. L. Lewis et al., Joseph Terry vs. Charles Heckler.

Feb. 17—W. E. Carroll vs. J. M. Trapp, S. C. Wilson vs. D. Welsh et al., M. P. Gilchrist vs. L. Kaufman, O. L. Bishop vs. M. Meyer et al.

Feb. 18—Dennis Driscoll vs. Daniel Shields, A. Yadinis vs. Frank Hyatt et al., J. E. Thill vs. William H. Price, P. McCarthy et al. vs. James H. Pace et al.

Judge Lindsay yesterday made a personal investigation into the condition of ex-Convict Combs, who is under legal restraint on the charge of insanity, and convinced himself that the man is a fit subject for examination by a commission.

Combs told the judge that the angels came to his house in private heaven, dressed him and carried him to heaven. He will probably be examined within a few days.

Judge Clancy last evening also granted a divorce to the plaintiff in the case of Emma Fitzsimmons against James Fitzsimmons on the ground of desertion. She testified that they were married about two years ago and that a year ago he left and went to Alaska.

Judge Lindsay yesterday decided quite an important question in the case of J. W. Kemper against W. L. Farlin and J. A. Murphy. Kemper had brought suit to foreclose a mortgage on the Silver Cliff lode claim, the mortgage having been given by Farlin to secure a loan of $1,000, February, 1892.

Murray claimed a superior title and claim to the property and in his answer said that in 1890 a judgment for $1,500 was obtained by Holter & Bro. against Farlin, and in 1892 A. J. Davis obtained an assignment of the judgment from Holter. On May 15, 1897, the court authorized an execution to be issued on the judgment and the property mortgaged to Kemper was sold by the sheriff and bought in by Murray. The matter came up yesterday on a demurrer to the answer, and on a motion to strike out on the ground that the judgment holders having waited longer than six years after the rendition of the judgment before issuing an execution on it, had waived the lien of the judgment, which they otherwise would have possessed under the statute, and that the mortgage, after the expiration of the demurrer and motion, and that in its judgment, the law on the subject was well settled.

The lien of the judgment obtained by Holter & Bro. expired long prior to the proceeding taken by the assignee, Davis, to enforce or revive the judgment, and accordingly

A paper of exceptional interest to all club women was read by Mrs. A. H. Wethey at Wednesday's meeting of the Women's club. The subject was, "The Ideal Club Woman." It is as follows:

"It was a wild, wintry night, such as makes one hug the warm fireside and congratulate one's self on the open fire and the soft cushions, pitying those who must necessarily be abroad, when the wind howls around the corners, and one feels, without seeing, that the light snow is heaping up drift on drift. On such a night as this, as I sat in a warm corner, thinking, perhaps dreaming of my subject, I was aroused by a slight movement in the room, and started up to see seated before me a number of women with interested and expectant faces, listening for what was to come, and my own interest in what followed was intense, for here in my own parlor, whose dimensions (by the way) had considerably increased in a few seconds, I found our ideal club woman.

"She was prompt in attendance, she was well informed on the subject of the day; as chairman of a committee she made her report clearly and briefly. Her suggestions were thought out beforehand and presented with a clear understanding; she made a motion in a short sentence, with words carefully chosen to fully express her meaning; she seconded a motion with ease, always rising to her feet before speaking; she opposed a motion forcibly, giving her reasons for so doing; she thought quickly, and made remarks upon a motion as though she had long dwelt on the subject, although it might never have been presented to her before.

"In current events she was prepared with a fact of interest which she presented unaffectedly and interestingly; her papers, never too long, were well prepared and well read; she made no excuses, for she had none to make; in giving a book review she outlined the plot and commented upon it, bringing out the author's characteristics, as shown by the book, with a completeness which showed her careful study of his life. On another subject, hygiene, for example, she appeared unembarrassed and self-confident, knowing her subject well; she made herself conversant with all theories, and in the discussion she was able to answer all questions and correct erroneous statements. On art and music she handled her subject gracefully and elegantly, and as her melodious voice sounded through the room the pictures she described could be seen hanging upon the walls, and the music she knew so thoroughly was put into words, which, for the time at least, made her hearers believe that they, too, were artists and musicians. If she took a journey she carried her audience with her; they saw and she saw; they heard all she heard, and came back to the club room only when she again reached it. When a listener she listened intelligently and interestingly, and when the opportunity came she spoke accurately to her knowledge and belief; sometimes to start a discussion, sometimes to impart information, sometimes to impart it, and always with ease and a ready choice of language. She made suggestions for outside work in the community in which she lived; she showed that she was always alive to the welfare of those about her; she listened intently to other suggestions made, added to them as she saw fit, and urged upon the members active co-operation and work; she thought of beautifying the public school rooms, of abating public nuisances, of enforcing laws, of everything that could make the club felt as a power in the community. She urged the carrying out of free art exhibitions, concerts, lectures, entertainments of all kinds, she elevated the public taste; she was an inspiration to everyone with whom she came in contact.

"When asked how she could do so much without leaving home duties undone, she explained her belief that the more one does, the more one can do; that her work for the clubs and all it brought with it, sent her home with a clearer insight into the problems of practical living, and enabled her to keep abreast of her children, as they came home with their minds full of ideas freshly gathered at school and elsewhere; she showed that she could still lovingly without and my delightful for the few hours a week spent on club work than if she stayed at home forever drudging.

"But this club woman, you say, was perfect. We can never be like her. Why struggle for what we can never attain? Ah, my friend, I am only relating what I saw in my quiet room before I awoke and found the wind still howling without and my delightful vision only a dream; but shall we have no ideal because we can never reach her? Do we not in looking back see that what we once placed before us as impossible to attain, we have attained and have passed, and are reaching forward to something nobler, purer than we had before thought of? When we reach our ideal and grasp her, and she flies not away to lure us further on, we shall be ready to leave all behind and shall pass away to the unseen and unknown. What ideal for a club woman nobler than that of a perfect woman, so well described by a poetess of our own:

"Handsome? I hardly know, her profile fine, Delightful, intellectual, aquiline; Her keen eyes light it, keen, yet often kind, Her fair hair crowns it to an artist's mind.

Fine figure and fine manners, without doubt, Determine half her charm and bear me out.

Learned? Well, rather; see them for yourself. Mill, Spencer, Darwin on her favorite shelf.

Well educated, certainly well read, Well born, of course, and (not of course) well bred.

Provincial? Never! Cockney? Not at all. Her world is small enough, yet not too small.

To prove she knows it, only watch a smile. That humorous, tender, half-sarcastic smile.

Accomplished? She says not, but who is she to tell? She does some simple things, and does them well.

She walks well, stands well, sits well, thinks so rare, To praise as they deserve, I hardly dare.

She rows, rides, dances, admirably. Delights in each and yet depends on none.

What to take up she knows, and what to drop. How to say clever things and when to stop.

Few dress so well, she does what few can do. Forgets what she has on—and so do you.

She's not too careless, not too conventional quite. Does what she likes—knows what she does is right.

Takes New World freedoms with the Old World ease. She's but to please herself, the world to please.

The Homer club enjoyed a most delightful diversion on Monday when Mrs. Groenewald and Mrs. Hendricks entertained the club at the charming new home of Mrs. Groenewald. A miscellaneous programme took up the afternoon. The Art of Illumination and Illuminating Manuscripts was ably treated by Mrs. Groenewald. The paper gave a comprehensive sketch of the art of illumination, and Mrs. Carter told of "Our Colored People, Their Characteristics, Superstitions and Melodious." This was a most interesting paper, and called forth an animated discussion. "Famous Cathedrals" were described most graphically by Mrs. Speer, who has visited them all. Mrs. Speer's vivid portrayal almost deluded the members of the club into imagining that they had also visited these cathedrals. After the papers Miss Bondwick rendered a number of vocal selections, which added much to the pleasure of all present. During the serving of dainty refreshments a social chat was enjoyed.

GRIT OF A BRIDE. She will accompany her husband to the Klondike. From the Buffalo Express.

A party of gold seekers en route to the Klondike is to do a most unusual thing in itself as to excite more than passing interest. Such sights will be common enough during the ensuing weeks of the late winter and early spring. The gold fever has swept all parts of the country with extreme virulence, finding victims in almost every hamlet, so that as the days go by, bringing nearer the time when the trail over the Chilkoot or navigation on the Yukon will be open, the rush of adventurous argonauts to the frigid zone will gather force and volume like the incoming tides of the ocean. It is estimated that at least 200,000 persons will essay the trip as soon as the journey may be undertaken with some degree of assurance that advancing spring has razed impassable barriers. Hardly a day passes without contributing its quota to the army now mobilizing at Seattle. Squads pass through Buffalo almost daily without attracting special notice, so familiar has become the sight of the gold seekers that going to the Klondike is quite the regular thing.

But the party that left Bradford, Pa., on Monday morning is somewhat unique in its personnel, and so merits attention denied ordinary hopefuls. The party is composed, for the most part, of lawyers, doctors, business and society men but what invests it with peculiar interest, interest is the fact that a young bride is the bright particular star of the combination.

The woman in question, until recently was Miss Blanche Chapman, an acknowledged belle in exclusive society circles. A few weeks ago Miss Chapman became Mrs. Arthur Hurley. The bridegroom is a wealthy young business man, and one of the leaders of the select set. As some of his intimate friends were going to the Klondike, Mr. Hurley concluded that he would try his fortune in the same distant region, and Mrs. Hurley decided to accompany him. The young husband readily acquiesced, and the long journey was begun on Monday morning as stated.

Mrs. Hurley is a refined and accomplished young woman about 29 years of age. She is a trifle above medium height, has a slight, willowy figure, a bright mind, a vivacious temperament, and an exceptionally attractive face. She is a sister of Mrs. Delevan Emery, whose husband is the son of Hon. Lewis Emery, Jr., of Bradford, the millionaire oil refiner and president of the United States Pipe Line company. Although Miss Chapman was a society girl in the fullest and best sense of the term, she was not for almost weeks during a man of the party informed the Express that on one occasion Miss Chapman accomplished what no man has ever dared to attempt, namely, coasted on a bicycle down Rew hill, a tortuous mountain road near Bradford, very steep and over a mile long, where the slightest mishap or momentary loss of presence of mind would dash the rider to death. As Mrs. Hurley, the young woman is not daunted by the reputed perils of Chilkoot or by the prospect of encountering the rigors of an Arctic winter. She declares that she will endure the hardships of the trail with as much fortitude and regard as Dawson City with as great a reserve fund of vital energy as any of the men. She is very enthusiastic over the prospect of sharing her husband's lot in Alaska, and her friends say that from the first she has resolutely refused to admit the possibility of insurmountable obstacles to the realization of her hopes.

As Mrs. Hurley talked of her arduous undertaking, her bearing was full of confidence in her ability to accomplish the task she has undertaken, and her bright eyes suggested no lack of spirit or grit. "I have considered the matter from every imaginable viewpoint," she said, "and although I realize that the trip from here to Dawson City will test my physical powers, my active mind power as well, perhaps, I am not at all shaken in my purpose. Other women have gone to the Klondike, why cannot I? Barring accidents, it is simply a question of unfaltering determination. I shall not falter. I shall be accompanied by my husband and half a dozen acquaintances upon whose protection I can rely in any emergency; therefore, I am not apprehensive of dangers, or at least annoyances, that otherwise might be encountered. I am prepared to rough it for a time. It will be a new experience for me, but I have a good constitution, and I am fond of active outdoor exercise has fostered habits which have inured me to physical fatigue and given the quality of wiry tenacity to a frame that you might think too frail to brave the hardships of the Klondike. Apart from the desire to be with her husband, which a bride might be expected to feel, it may be that hardships of the very thought of which appals some persons, has had an attraction for me. At present, I have always liked to overcome difficulties. I am not naturally timid and my nerves are in a healthy condition so far as I know. The Klondike has no terrors for me, and I do not think I am doing an unwomanly thing if it be an unusual thing in accompanying my husband there."

The party expects to remain at Seattle about five days, for the purpose of procuring an outfit, and then will take passage on the steamer Queen for Dyea, at which point the water journey will end and the real trials begin. The party will go to Dawson City by way of Chilkoot Pass, and expects to reach its destination late in April or early in May.

QUEEN MARGUERITE'S DOUBLE. Louisville Woman Noted for Her Resemblance to the Italian Queen.

Queen Marguerite of Italy has a double in the person of Mrs. George H. Yenowine, wife of a well-known Louisville, Ky., newspaper man. Mrs. Yenowine is a prominent society woman and her resemblance to the Italian royal consort has been often noted. The photograph of Mrs. Yenowine, which was taken recently, corresponds almost exactly with portraits of the queen taken some years ago, when she was a young woman. When a prominent magazine in New York published likenesses of Queen Marguerite the many acquaintances of Mrs. Yenowine all over the country asserted their belief that she was the original of the pictures of the most popular woman in Italy.

Apart from her resemblance to Italy's queen, Mrs. Yenowine is a quietly looking woman, with a carriage and presence that might easily seem royal, and an air of faultless breeding. The social position which she has held in the West and South has been of the highest.
