How Fashionable Ladies in Washington Drink.

Washington Correspondence St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

In society generally, the punch-bowl has been a more prominent figure at entertainments this year than for some seasons back. In deference to Mrs. Hayes' avowed principles, these spicy and insidious compounds that go by the name of punch were never offered at the receptions held by the Cabinet ladies and higher officials, and only occasions of private hospitality saved the great china and crystal bowls from complete neglect for those years. This year punch is the rule at every entertainment, and there are several hospitable houses that possess considerable fame in this respect. The invention of hub punch has saved hostesses a vast amount of trouble, and where the flowing bowls have to be refilled many times during an afternoon the process is much simplified. At the house of one of the foreign ministers, whose family is especially popular in society, a fine and fiery punch adds to the gaiety of each weekly occasion, and on the coldest, stormiest and most forbidding days of the season their parlors were always filled with the most brilliant and animated groups. Women who passed for stupid, and young ladies who were shy and timid in other places, found their tongues there, and the merriest kind of a time always reigned in that rose-lighted and flower-scented drawing-room. The daughter of the house, a dark and graceful beauty, stirred the amber liquid with a golden ladle and filled the glittering cups, and a coterie of ladies who kept around her during all the calling hours. Those same ladies left with a heightened color and glittering eyes, and many have watched with amusement to see the callers descend the doorsteps with slow motion and a firm grasp upon the handrail. Very often it happened to novices that they have made no more calls on those days, and a naive young lady, in refusing a proffered glass, said that she didn't "think that it paid to take punch and feel dizzy and cross eyed the rest of the afternoon." At many private german and dancing parties this winter punch and champagne have been as liberally provided for these young people as for a stag party of their elders, and some debutantes betray an acquaintance with different brands and qualities of wines that would more fitly become a club man. Plainly the temperance people will have to do more than have portraits painted if they wish to redeem their iniquity and keep green the example of Mrs. Hayes.

Young Ladies Who Smoke.

"The most regular and profitable customers I have," says a Louisville tobacco merchant, "are the members of a club of young ladies occupying the very pinnacle of social eminence here. There are two members of the club who came here two or three times at first to make purchases, but now I know what is wanted, and the money is always brought and the goods taken away by a comely mulatto girl. These fastidious, genteel smokers require the very finest quality of tobacco, flavored with the faintest and most delicate perfumes known to the trade. Of course, the brand which I sell them is imported, as no domestic article is made sufficiently good or costly for their use. It was some time before I could obtain a cigar which satisfied them, but after sending them more than a dozen different boxes as samples the two fair damsels came one day and told me they were all delighted with the last ones they tried, and since then I have a small stock on hand for their special use."

How Jackson and Benton Made Peace.

President Lincoln is quoted by Charles Gilson of St. Louis as telling a story illustrating Thomas H. Benton's turn for the drama. Benton and Jackson had long been at feud; they had engaged in a rough and tumble fight, and had not met for many years until Jackson was President and Benton Senator from Missouri. "It was in this room," said President Lincoln, at the White House, "that their first meeting took place. Jackson was seated at this very table, when the door yonder swung open and Benton stalked in and stood silently in the middle of the floor. Jackson looked up and recognized him at once, and recollected at the same time he had no weapon to defend himself. He silently got up, walked to the door, locked it and put the key in his pocket, and went back to his seat. Then he said, 'Does this mean war or peace?' 'It means peace,' said Mr. Benton. Jackson again arose, walked to the door, unlocked it, came back to his seat, and then said: 'Colonel Benton, I am pleased to see you. Take a chair.' All this time Benton was standing statuesquely in the centre of the room, never moving a muscle while Jackson was locking and unlocking the door, and the reconciliation between the two gentlemen was complete."
