

The McGarrahan Claims.

New York, April 8.—The Tribune has the following from its Washington correspondent: Claimants live long and never despair. Claims live always nothing can kill them. McGarrahan, aided by his counsel, ex-congressman Hunton, of Virginia, has succeeded in securing from the house committee on private land claims, another report in favor of his Panoche Grande. Pacheco, who is chairman of the committee, disents from the views of his colleagues, and has presented a strong minority report. The amount of land claimed under the old Mexican grant is about 17,000 acres, but a majority of the committee recommends a bill which, if enacted into law, would give McGarrahan and his silent partners eight or ten million acres of public lands, to be selected anywhere on public domain surveyed. The value of acreage issued on such conditions is, as Pacheco points out, at least $6 an acre. The bill proposes to indemnify McGarrahan by turning over to him and his silent partners property worth fifty or sixty million dollars. The committee on Private Land Claims, in order to establish a basis of indemnification, has to fly in the face of a repealed decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which have declared the Mexican grants of land did not carry with them the title to minerals, but that the remainder is in the hands of the Government of Mexico, and with the transfer of territory the title of all minerals pass to the Government of the United States. Moreover, the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously adjudged the Gomez grant, upon which the McGarrahan claims rest, to be invalid after noting several judicial decisions against the claim. Pacheco forcibly remarks that under such circumstances the proposals of the bill seem to the minority open to objection, that they contain a direct assault upon the co-ordinate branch of the Government, and are dangerous as a precedent in that the Gomez claim is but one of more than forty rejected California land claims, few of which are of less merit than that of Gomez. If McGarrahan can secure the enactment now of a bill, which he has prevailed on a majority of the committee to report, he ought to feel abundantly satisfied with his investment of $1,000,000, which is the sum he paid for the Gomez grant, and his partners will be able to divide a pretty sum among themselves and their "pals," whether Congressmen, or ex-Congressmen or lawyers.

Sooville III.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—Mr. George Sooville, Guitau's brother-in-law and counsel, who has been several days taken to his bed and is reported seriously ill. To a reporter who asked him if he intended to leave the case of Guitau after the bill of exceptions was completed, he said: "I have never intended that Guitau should be without counsel. I had hoped that after the bill of exceptions was made out I could get some one to take hold of the case, but there appears to be no chance for that, so I will, I suppose, have to look after it myself."

The Star Route Cases.

CHICAGO, April 8.—The Journal's Washington special says: The motion to quash the star route cases will probably be overruled, and the cases set for the last week in this month. The trials will last two months. Attorney General Brewster has given up his project of managing the star route cases in person and will rely on Mr. Merrick, giving occasional encouragement by his presence in court when convenient.

The new town of Butte, in Pinal county, A. T., is situated on the Gila River, fifteen miles from Pinal. The town covers a beautiful plateau, slightly inclining to the river. The surrounding scenery is magnificently picturesque. Peaks, crags, precipices and towering rocks, in all forms and shapes, surround the town, and enormous buttes, from which the town takes its name, are immediately below the West.

Investigating Light Literature.

The other day a stout woman, armed with an umbrella and leading an urchin, called at the office of a New York boy's story paper. "Is this the place where they fight Indians?" she inquired of the gentleman in charge. "Is this the locality where the brave boy charges up the canyon and spears a bullet in the heart of the dusky red skin?" and she jerked the urchin around by the ear and brought her umbrella down on the desk. "We publish stories for boys," replied the young man evasively.

"I want to know if these are the premises on which the daring and daring through the circle of the understock savages, cuts the captive's cords and bears him away before the wonderful Indians have recovered from their astonishment? That's the information I'm after. I want to know if that sort of thing is perpetrated here?" and she swung the umbrella around her head and launched a crack at the young man's head.

"I don't remember those specific acts," protested the young man. "I want to know if this is the precinct where the adventurous boy jumps on the back of a buffalo and with unerring aim picks off one by one the blood-thirsty pursuers who bite the dust at every crack of his faithful rifle? I'm looking for the place where that wonderful thing happens!" and this time she brought the unlucky young man a tremendous back across the back.

"I think—" commenced the dodging victim. "I'm in search of the shop where the boy road agent holds the quivering stage driver powerless with his glittering eye, while he robs the male passengers with an adroitness born of long and tried experience, and kisses the hands of the lady passengers with a gallantry of bearing that bespeaks noble birth and a chivalrous nature!" screamed the woman, diving the young man into the corner. "I'm looking for the apartment where that busin' ess is transacted!" and down came the umbrella with trip-hammer force upon the young man's head.

"Upon my soul, ma'am—" gasped the wretched youth. "I want to be introduced to the jars in which you keep the boys' souls of the Sierras. Show me the bins full of the boy detectives of the prairie! Point out to me the barrels full of boy pirates of the Spanish main!" and with each demand she dropped the umbrella on the young man's skull, until he skipped over the desk and sought refuge in a neighboring canyon. "I'll teach 'em!" she panted, grasping the urchin by the ear and leading him off. "I'll teach 'em to make it good or dance. Want to go fight Indians any more? Want to stand proudly upon the pinnacles of the mountain and scatter the plain beneath with the bleeding bodies of uncounted slain? Want to say 'hist!' in a tone that brooks no contradiction? Propose to spring upon the taffrail and with a ringing word of command send a broadside into the richly laden galleys, and then mercifully spare the beautiful maiden in the cabin, that she may become your bride? Eh! Going to do it any more?"

With each question she hammered the yelling urchin until his bones were sore and he protested his permanent abandonment of all the glories enumerated. "Then come along," said she, taking him by the collar. "Let me catch you around with any more ramrods and carving knives, and you'll think the leaping, curling, restless prairie fire had swept with a ferocious roar of triumph across the trembling plains and lodged in your pantaloons to stay."

THE BURDEN OF SILVER DOLLARS.

Thurlow Weed Advises Secretary Folger How to Relieve the Sub-Treasurers.

To the Editor of the New York Tribune. Sir: The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report regarding the accumulation of silver dollars as burdensome and embarrassing, appeals to Congress to arrest their further coinage. Two months of the session having elapsed without action upon the Secretary's appeal, I venture to suggest a plan of relief which does not seem to have occurred either to Secretary Folger or President Arthur. Fortunately, before the present Secretary was charged with the onerous custody of silver dollars, much the largest portion was represented by silver certificates—these certificates constituting an essential element in our currency. If the Secretary will obey the Constitution and laws, the Sub-Treasurers will soon be relieved. Silver and gold under our constitution and laws are the legal standards of money. It is, therefore, the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the debts of the Government in the money of the Government. For the money required to preserve the Government and the Union, the borrower offered, and the lender accepted, 6 per cent. bonds payable, principal and interest, in coin. The rate of usance "was nominated in the bond" and indorsed upon its back, the duty of the Treasurer, therefore, is not only plain and simple, but imperative. When he shall have discharged that duty there will be no more lamentations over the millions of silver dollars under the burden of which Sub-Treasurers have been groaning. It is time also that another class of citizens should be brought to their senses. Bankers refuse to receive silver dollars in payment of debts. The validity of such refusals should be submitted to a judicial test. Our tribunals decide questions in accordance with law and in obedience to the constitution. The silver dollar has been declared by a law of Congress a legal tender in the payment of debts. That law was passed in obedience to a provision of the constitution which imposes upon Congress the duty of assimilating the relative value of the precious metals.

Such is the simple solution of a gratuitously vexed financial problem. When, therefore, the Secretary of the Treasury discharges his duty, and aggrieved debtors appeal from the banks to the court, the business of the country will run smoothly through its accustomed channels, cherishing the industries, developing the wealth, and extending the boundaries of a prosperous and happy country and people. T. W. New York, March 10, 1882.

A Skeleton in a Tree.

Two men who live in the northern part of Gilmer county, Georgia, near the Cohutta range, made a startling discovery a few days ago. They had chased a depredating fox to his covert, which proved to be an immense hollow tree trunk, charred and blackened by forest fires. It was comparatively but a large stump, being not more than twenty feet high, evidently having been snapped in twain by some fierce hurricane, which had swept that way. The wily robber of the henery had entered an aperture near the base of the tree, and all efforts at smothering him out had proved futile. As a last resort, one of them suggested burning the fox's nose of entrance and then felling the tree, which, owing to its aged and decayed condition, would be an easy task. The plan was adopted, and a few vigorous strokes of their axes sent the old shell crashing to the earth, and reynard in attempting to make his escape was summarily dispatched with an axe. As they were preparing to take their departure, one of the men discerned something white gleaming in the old hollow stump, and upon examination was horrified to behold the bleached bones of a dismembered human skeleton. The men were considerably startled by their strange discovery, and on further inspection a powder-horn and bullet-pouch were brought to light, together with a few moldering articles of raiment, but nothing was found to indicate who the person had been. Many conjectures have been made as to how the skeleton came to be where it was found and how long it had reposed in this strange mausoleum, the affair being a profound mystery.

"Hardening" the Body.

A young man was an earnest advocate of a theory that the human body can accommodate itself to any temperature in which it may be placed. One winter he determined to harden himself by wearing no covering for his ears; they were badly frozen on a very cold day, and were tender for several years after. He grew wise and abandoned the hardening process. A young woman heard an eloquent lecture on the importance of fresh air in chambers at night. The lecturer said there was no danger from a window slightly opened; the body would soon harden itself so as to resist the effect of the exposure. She tried the experiment one cold night and caught a severe cold, which lasted the entire winter. She lost faith in hardening against cold. A young mother maintained that children ought not to be brought up too tenderly. Arms and legs ought to be hardened by exposure in early years, and not made tender by warm coverings in winter. She lost her two oldest children by croup and pneumonia, induced, as the physician said, by insufficient clothing. She gave up the attempt to harden the others. The best way to harden the body is to protect it well from extremes both of cold and heat, and build up a stronger constitution by good food, good sleep and good exercise. The Scotch Highlanders, with their bare legs, are victims to rheumatism.

ARIZONA AT LARGE.

Gen. Sherman and party arrived at Wilcox, A. T., yesterday and went to Tombstone last evening; thence to Tucson and Huachuca. For the benefit of those who are not posted on the natural history of the Territory, we may mention that the Arizona strawberry is known as the red bean, the Arizona violet as the onion, and the Arizona nightingale as the burro or donkey, and also termed in Nevada the "Washoe canary." The Northwest Enterprise, Washington Territory, tells the following bridge stories: Twenty-five hundred men are at work on Clark's Fork division, Northern Pacific railroad between Lake Pen d'Oreille and Pack River, thirteen miles east of the head of the lake. The two-mile bridge across the lake is about finished. At Pack River there will be another bridge 6,800 feet long, which is now in process of construction.

A Modern Irish Battle.

A writer in the Fortnightly Review, after describing how, during the last armed uprising in Ireland in 1868, three hundred peasants, with Enfield rifles, were drawn up in a formidable position on a steep hillside, thus goes on: "A pig was cooking and all was festive and hopeful, when the morning light displayed a car after car of peasers and red soldiers below. Swiftly the British line was formed—two companies of foot, a handful of constabulary and a few country gentlemen on horseback. Up they went, but the Republicans were in position, fully extended behind their cover—the distance had been marked with flags and the rifles were loaded and capped. 'Fag,' said Barney Martin to a friend, Broona, 'it's little like a rebellion I feel at all. There's the chapel bell ringin' below, and the people goin' to work like Christians, and the devil differ (difference) I see from yesterday. I'm in the same frieze coat as the same old hat and sure I see no signs of the Irish republic at all, at all, only the little green flag and the little chap with the sword, and us here like a lot of wanderin' rabbits watin' for the police to shoot us, an' sure here's out of it!' The leader eyed the approaching host, and, without looking behind or to the right or the left of him, began the morning's duties. 'Steady—at 300 yards—prepare to fire, now—300 yards—no man fire till I give the word. Aim low—steady. A minute passed; the soldiers reached the fatal spot. 'Fire!' Not a bit of it. No sound broke the stillness of the morning air. 'Fire!' reiterated the 'little man with the sword, and he turned wildly to look along his line. Alas! the ditch was empty, and Jim Blake, the officer's orderly, among the faithless faithful only found, responded: 'If it's firing ye mane, bedad they're all firin'—over the hill behind, for the devil a man of them's left.' It was true, the battle was over. The peasantry had grasped at facts, recognized the logic of circumstances, and preserved themselves if not Ireland.

Vanderbilt as a Gambler.

The announcement of the telegraph that Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., had succeeded in New York, recalls an incident that John Pentland, the proprietor of a big club house here, and also one at Denver, was fond of narrating concerning him. Pentland formerly ran a gaming house in New York, which was patronized by some of the blue blood of Gotham, among the rest young Vanderbilt. The son of the house of riches was what was termed among the fraternity "a high player." When not in funds his name was always sufficient to raise the necessary cash, and the bank never refused to shove out whatever chips he desired upon his I. O. U. "He was subject to epilepsy," said Pentland, "and used to keel over in a fit when he had the table all covered with bets. He wore false teeth, and they would generally come out first thing. There was nothing that we could do for him, and we used to just lay the teeth on the table and wait for him to come out; and what do you think? Pentland used to add with a smile, 'when he would come to again he would knock where every bet was, and if anybody took one of them—why, you ought to have heard the roar he would make; it was something awful.'—'Free Gold' in Denver Republican.

A Queen's Courtesy.

The kind Queen of Belgium showed the other day what grace and gentle courtesy adds to womanhood. In the Rue Royal, a cabman was waiting on the stand, seated on his box, a sudden gust of wind carried off his hat and sent it dancin' along the street, while he, unable to leave his horse, was gesticulating frantically to the passers-by, who, insensible to his appeals, were enjoying the scene. Just then the Queen drove past in her pony-chaise, and seeing the poor man's distress, stopped and ordered a groom to get down and run after the hat. Her Majesty waited till it was brought and restored to its owner, who, now more embarrassed than before, did not know how to express his gratitude. She then bowed her acknowledgments of the awkward attempt he made to convey his sense of her condescension, touched her horse, and drove off, having given a lesson to the little crowd of crestfallen bystanders, which it is to be hoped was not lost upon them.

Hamian Wins. The American eagle screams again. His pin feathers are exalted, and he yaws from the classic waters of the Thames to the picturesque shores of Muddy Creek. Another American victory has been won on English waters. In the great race between Hanlan and Boyd-to-day the former won by four boat-lengths. To be sure, Hanlan is a Canadian, and, of course, a British subject; but, all the same, he comes from the American continent, and the bird of freedom feels justified in lifting up its plumage. There is no doubt that in the present contest Hanlan was pitted against the most dangerous antagonist he has yet had, and hence the victory is all the more creditable. Hooray!—New York Press, April 8th.

Defective Fences.

A recent decision on the question of a person's liability in damages by reason of defective fences is thus told by the New York Tribune: "A flock of wayward sheep went half a mile and destroyed nine thousand cabbages. The owner of the crop brought damages against his next-door neighbor, who kept no stock himself, but whose boundary fences were defective. The county judges refused to hold the defendant, on the ground that a farmer is only responsible for restraining his own animals, if he have any, but that there is no obligation upon him to maintain a line of defence capable of warding off all cattle which may happen to be careering across the country."

CURRENT NEWS.

The Chicago Tribune calls Captain Eads "the most audacious, unprincipled and successful lobbyist the national capital ever had." Commissioner Walsh, of Texas, estimates that certificates have been issued for 5,000,670 acres above the public domain in existence open to location. A young man of port Jervis was engaged to marry a young lady, but she retrograded him. He then took a step farther and proposed to her mother. They are now bossing the girl together. At the present time there are no less than three dozen applicants among the cities of the United States for public structures, involving an anticipated expenditure of over $3,000,000. Sixty head of "grass Texans," the best cattle in the market, were sold at St. Louis the other day for $5.50 per hundred pounds, and the price is said to have been the highest ever paid in the West. The estate of A. T. Stewart is gradually selling out its manufacturing establishments throughout the country, and the great store on Broadway will soon be relinquished or passed over to other hands.

At Des Moines, Iowa, distillery the other day, by a mistake, alcohol was run through waste pipe into troughs in the hog yard. The result was that the swine did eat thereof, and for several hours thereafter acted as though possessed of the devil, sure. In short, they were hilariously drunk. A committee of the city government of Boston reports that arrangements are now being made to pay all city laborers every fourteen days. About 600 persons employed by the city make assignments of wages, and 107 of these assignments are held by one money lender at rates of interest from five to twelve per cent. per month. There is some talk in Wall street over the new code of criminal procedure which goes into effect May 1st. Under "circulating false intelligence, statement or rumor" is a misdemeanor, and "a person who secretly loiters about a building with intent to overhear discourse therein and to repeat and publish the same to vex or annoy or injure others is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Among Longfellow's classmates at Bowdoin in 1825, were John C. Abbott, the popular historian; Jonathan Cilley, the Maine Congressman, who fell in the duel with Representative William J. Graves, of the Louisville District; J. W. Bradley, the eminent lawyer and politician; George B. Cheever, the anti-slavery advocate; Nathaniel Hawthorne, and others who achieved eminence. St. Louis has had a spasm of enforcing the law for licensing vehicles and drivers have been arrested by scores. A singular part of the performance was setting a lot of policemen to watch about the principal dry goods stores, and arresting the drivers of carriages bringing women shopping. The Jehus were whisked away to the police court while the women were making clerks unhappy, and there was ruffling of tempers when going home time came. Mrs. Mackey is exceedingly indignant at the reports current in Paris of her daughter's approaching marriage with a son of the Bourbon. She expressed herself very strongly on the whole subject. She complains that she is besieged by fortune-hunters. "If I see a young man, I shall have to put a notice up on the door," said the wonderful little lady, "announcing that, in conformity with American customs, Miss Mackey will not have any marriage portion."

St. Louis school-ma'am statistics: There are 850 female teachers in the schools, of whom 250 have been in the service less than 5 and 300 more than 10 years. The average age when appointed is 21 years, and the pay at first is $200, which rises in five years to $300 and in ten years to $400. There are 45 married teachers of whom ten have husbands dependent upon them. Three-quarters of those who resign leave immediate matrimony in view, but they rarely stop work for that purpose until at least after five year's service, and upon the other hand there is no case on record of a succumbing to the tender passion after working ten years. Cornelius A. Logan, the newly appointed minister to Chili, is a brother of Olive Logan. He at an early day emigrated to Kansas, and took an active part in the politics of that State. In 1873 he was appointed United States Minister to Chili, and at the request of the Governments of Peru and Chili was made arbitrator to adjust the difficulties existing between these republics relative to the debts contracted by the South American republics while at war with Spain. His success in this won for him warm commendations.
