PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 24.—A charter was granted to day to the Sporting Life Publishing Co., of Philadelphia, with a capital stock of $50,000. The object of the company is to publish a weekly journal devoted entirely to athletic and other sports.

KALAMA, W. T., Aug. 24.—General Sherman died this evening. Tomorrow he leaves for Fort Vancouver where a grand reception will be given him by Gen. Miles.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—Andrew Souger and Carl Stein, working in Halpell's brewery, 161st street, today entered a large mash tub to do some work. Ignorant of their presence the engineer set the machinery in motion, and the life was literally pounded out of Souger. Stein was taken out and sent to the hospital.

A PAIR OF SPANISH.

A Nephew of the Pope Captivated a Cuban Heiress.

American girls have high matrimonial aspirations. Sometimes in their flight they catch a German baron, an Italian count, a French marquis. Rarely, in the uppermost air of all, they encounter an English peer, or even the son of a peer, or even the nephew of a peer. But rarely, very rarely, is it given to them to capture the nephew of a Pope. Yet that is the fate of Miss Sylvine Bueno, a wealthy heiress from Cuba.

The father of Miss Bueno was a Spaniard, who emigrated when young to the Pearl of the Antilles, made his fortune in a bank, and returned to Europe. There he gave himself up to pleasure, he was at Paris, Rome or Seville, whether sunning himself at the seaside or following up the hunt at Fontainebleau. His wife did the match-making for his daughters. One of them married Senor Agrela, a Spaniard. Another, Sylvine, was staying with her relatives at Seville, the Paris of Andalusia, when a tall and handsome young Italian arrived from Rome on a mission, which needed her father's aid. He was the nephew of Pope Leo XIII.

No family ever lived more quietly than that of Gioacchino Pecci, now head of the Catholic Church. Before the time of his elevation, he had been settled in the heart of Italy, at Carpineto, perched on the volcanic mountains. Here, in an atmosphere of nobility and refinement, the childhood of the future Pope was spent, and here he was educated. He went with his brothers to school. His brothers were four—Giuseppe, Carlo, Giovanni Battista and Ferdinando—of whom Giuseppe alone survives, an evout man and a patriot. His sisters were two—Anna Maria and Caterina—both of whom are dead. Giovanni Battista left five children; Anna Maria left four. Carlo, Luigi Pecci, 1855, is the second son of Giovanni Battista.

He has been a favorite with the Pope, who gave him apartments in the Vatican, made him a member of the Guard of Honor, and intrusted him with delicate missions. His oldest brother had been engaged to Sigornora Zaccoco, a maiden of Carpineto, and when his uncle was raised to power he was obliged to break his engagement, for all the heiresses in Rome would now be at his feet; but Leo XIII would have none of it, and Sigornora became the wife of Count Luigi Pecci. His eldest sister, Anna, married the Marchese Canoli and received from the Pope the dowry which Luigi received, to-wit, twelve thousand Roman crowns. But Carlo, who was a young soldier, either Luigi or Anna. He was the ideal of a fine young soldier, and the ladies were all in love with him.

In the spring of 1882 he was dispatched by his uncle to carry a Cardinal's hat to the Archbishop of Seville, Monsignor Luchy Garriga. He was received with acclamation by the Andalusian aristocracy. He went everywhere, and whether it was to the opera, to the theatre, or to the country, he was being thrummed or from the shadow of a Moorish gate, or from the row of the amphitheatre at the bull fight, two eyes flashed out upon him, and he knew that he was being watched. Six months went by; he had returned to Rome; he was on duty one morning in the Vatican, when again he beheld the eyes. They had come from the balcony of the tower of St. Raphael's "Transfiguration," Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment"—and the fell on the figure of a Guardia Mobile, and sealed the desecration by a pistol raiser who came in later and demanded pay for his Brahmas.

Strikes About Talleyrand.

Mr. Greville's most interesting stories are about Talleyrand, whom he knew very well. Stories about Talleyrand are almost always good; it is his habit to make up his mind or not they are new. Some verses of his, written when he was a priest and in love, are mentioned, not printed. "He was very proud of a definition of 'L'Amour.'" "Love is a reality in the realm of the imagination." It does not sound much to be proud of in English. He said of Talleyrand, M. de Narbonne is not new, but it is good. The gentleman was very tedious, and one day, while driving Talleyrand across the Point Neuf, he said to Talleyrand, "Talleyrand saw a man yawning at a distance, and said to his companion: 'Don't speak so loud, we are overheard.'" He said of Talleyrand, "She pretends to know everything, and make herself of importance, and when she invents—the consequences of her invention being ill-natured stories. Napoleon, according to Talleyrand had moments in which he played the moralist among the ladies of his court. The emperor thought the conduct of the Marchese de Villars was particularly droll. Talleyrand desired to know what the Marchese could possibly have been doing. Madame de Genlis enraged Madam de Stael (and no wonder) by saying, 'He said of Talleyrand, 'L'Amour.'" "Love is a reality in the realm of the imagination." It does not sound much to be proud of in English. He said of Talleyrand, M. de Narbonne is not new, but it is good.
