J. M. Bragg is putting the summer in by running a new slope for his coal mine for this fall and winter, and has a new tunnel in about 150 feet. He has a vein of coal 40 inches in height, which will keep his men going all winter and will furnish all the coal the people of Havre want.

Travelers coming in on the Great Northern all compliment the business men of the city on the active appearance of the place and predict that within a year Havre people will consider their big fire a blessing in disguise.
