Chinook Opinion: Last Monday afternoon a team belonging to L. B. Taylor, which was left untied for a moment, took fright and started down Main street at top speed. At Ross' hill they overtook Frank Bowes' buggy containing John B. Elie and Jas. McCoy. Each of the runaway horses took a different side of the Bowes rig, and in the mix-up which followed Mr. Elie sustained a dislocated shoulder and several bad bruises, and Mr. McCoy was severely bruised up also. The Bowes buggy was smashed to kindling wood, and how the two gentlemen escaped fatal injury is a mystery.

Another batch of oil placer locations has been received at the county clerk's office, about thirty having been filed by G. S. Spoffard, P. B. Gallagher, James E. Jewell, D. C. Dulin, Dan Johnson and others. This makes over 130 locations filed in what is known as the Bannatyne oil field, making a total of some 21,000 acres, most of which are in townships 24 and 25 north, range 1 east. Oil placer locations covering about 2,400 acres just west of the Chouteau county line have been filed in Teton county.—River Press.

FEARSOME SIGHTS IN A STORM

While the October hurricane was raging off the Jersey coast, the hardy skippers of many crafts saw sights that confirmed their faith in the most startling traditions of the sea, and shook their nerve far more than the fury of the storm. Captain Ben Sammis, of the schooner Bartley Hope, fought his way to port with a tale of having seen a creature like a huge serpent, on whose back was riding a being having the head and body of a woman of exceeding loveliness. Below the waist she was fashioned like a fish with scales and fins. Her hair was long and of a golden hue, and she combed it with one hand, while she held a looking-glass in the other.

This strange sea tale was scoffed at until Captain Ade Seidmore, commanding a schooner of the Fulton Market fishing fleet, reported having seen two sea-serpents near the Sandy Hook lightship. The first one he met with reared itself out of the water, and he was satisfied that it was a plesiosaurus. The second creature, which he and the crew watched for a quarter of an hour, had the body of an alligator, a long neck, and six paddles. Shortly after two other sea-captains rounded up in New York Harbor, and declared that they had seen mermaids, beautiful and graceful, and monsters, hideous and threatening, along the Jersey coast. Other witnesses vouched for these marvels, as they had caught glimpses of them from the storm-swept beaches.

The imagination of Captain Hank Henderson ran away with him, and he overtopped all other stories by reporting that he had seen a marine monster three hundred feet long, which rose like a mast and snapped at the men on his deck.

Excitement in shipping circles was at white heat. There could have been no collusion among these affrighted sea-dogs. Sailors were deserting in flocks, and swore they would never go to sea again, if, to the other dangers of the deep, there was to be added a plague of mermaids and sea-serpents. Amateur scientists and daring hunters of big game were burning with impatience to pursue these wonderful creatures.

Among the interested listeners to these chronicles was a youth from Rockaway Beach, and he posted off with important information, which resulted in the following bulletin, as sent to the ship news office at the Battery:

"Herman Kenselman, whose merry-go-round was washed out to sea in the storm of Saturday, has engaged seven men to recover some of the wooden figures of fishes, dragons, and other animals which broke away from the wrecked carousel. He has found no traces of two of the most valuable figures, which were life-sized mermaids, carved by hand, at a cost of $300 each. He hopes to recover some of the larger wooden serpents and mermaids for the reason that iron plates were attached to them, which would act as keels and prevent them from splitting, at the same time keeping them floating upright."—Exchange

Cavanaugh & Fisher have sold their saloon to Fred Adler and Joe LaSuer. Both are popular young men and will doubtless make a success of the business.
