BRADLEY'S RESOLVE.

It was a cold winter night, And the tempest was howling, When Bradley, the Tar, staggered home to his room.

"Arrah! Bradley, says she, 'you have been drinking more whisky; Get out of the house, you're worse than a cow.'"

"Arrah! Kathleen, my darling, what's up with you now? You know very well it's a shame and a sin, too, Your husband is better than that, you'll allow."

"Arrah! Bradley, says she, 'what's the use of your talking, You know very well you've been drinking all day, Your poor wife and children at home, and half starved, And you never bring home a red cent of your pay.'"

"You know very well, when you get your work's wages, The first plan you go into the grog shop, And there you'll stay 'til you've spent the last cent of it, Then you'll come home just as drunk as a top."

"Oh! Bradley, says she, 'if you take my advice now, You never will enter that grog shop no more, When you get your work's wages, come home to your Kathleen, And help for to keep the grim wolf from the door.'"

"Arrah! Kathleen, says he, 'tis myself that's sobered, For I never yet heard you talk that way, And every time that I draw my wages, dear, The devils take the grog shops, I'll be there no more!"

FRAGMENTS OF THE EARLY HISTORY OF OHIO COUNTY.

CHAPTER VI.

By an act of the General Assembly, approved the 17th day of December, 1798, and amended by a supplementary act, passed in 1799, it was enacted that all that part of Hardin, beginning at Blackfork creek, on the Ohio river, thence up said creek to the head of the Southeast fork that heads opposite Harris' fork, thence across the dividing ridge to the said Harris' fork, thence down the same to Rock Lick creek, thence down the same to Rough creek, thence a straight line to the Flat Clay Lick, on Bear creek, and down the same to Green river, and down Green river and up the Ohio to the beginning, he formed into a new county, to be called Ohio, &c., &c.

The reader will be astonished to learn that this immense territory, embracing land enough for several German Principalities, and including what is now the whole of Davison, and parts of Heuser county, Butler, Grayson, Brenckridge, Hancock and McLean, in 1801 had only 347 tithable, which number fell off to 335 in 1802 and only reached 375 in 1803, a large portion of the revenue from which must have been exhausted in paying for wolf scalp, which seems to have then been a charge upon the county, and allowed for at the rate of 8 shillings each, and the records show the following numbers for each year: The year 1800, 23; 1801, 63; 1802, 12; 1803, 33; 1804, 30; and 1805, 86.

The first County Court was organized on the 2nd of July, 1799, by the following gentlemen, who, being commissioned by the then Governor Garrard, being first sworn, and taking their seats as justices of the peace, namely: Jesse Craven, Stephen Cleaver, H. D. Taylor, David Glenn, Robert Parnet and Christopher Jackson, and the court fully organized by the appointment of Wm. Rowan, clerk, and Stephen Stalder, sheriff.

A synopsis of the orders made at the first term may amuse the reader, showing in what particulars the routine of business in county courts differed from the present day:

1. Order of a deed from Jesse Craven to James Keel. Acknowledged.

2. Releasing John Howell from paying lands, &c.

3. Samuel York, sworn as an attorney at law.

4. Henry Davidge, sworn as an attorney at law.

5, 6 and 7. Ignatius Fignian's, John Howell's and Joshua Crow's stock marks recorded.

8. Stephen Cleaver appointed county surveyor.

9. Viewers of road from Smith's Ferry to Hartford.

10. Like order for road from mouth of Panther creek.

11. Like order for road from Milligan's Ferry.

12 and 13. Alexander Barnett's and Wm. Smith's stock marks recorded.

14. Stephen Stalder moves for leave to build mill on North Fork of Muddy.

15. James Bait appointed coroner.

16. Road to county line in direction of Hartford.

17. Leave for Christopher Jackson to keep ordinary at his house.

18, 19 and 20. Recording stock marks of Cleaver, Stalder and Glenn.

21. Establishing seat of justice at Hartford.

22. Cleaver and Craven, commissioners to contract for building jail.

formed; the upper place of voting was at the house of Stephen Cleaver—and Thos. Gill and John Oldham appointed judge, and Cleaver clerk; and the lower at the house of Geo. Ashley—Benjamin Field and Anthony Thompson, judges, and Rev. Wm. Downs, clerk.

We will close our notice of these old records, for the present, by noticing a melancholy occurrence. In October, 1803, Daniel Sipple was arrested and tried before a called session of the court, and sent on for further trial for horse stealing, and finally convicted and sent to the penitentiary for a period of years.

He was respectfully connected. Had always borne the character of an honest, industrious man, but would sometimes drink to excess. In a drunken spree he had been the tool of villains, who derived the benefit of his theft, and left him the victim of the law. But did he succumb to his ill fortune, and become degraded outcast? By no means. He left his weeping family; went to his prison, and by the most exemplary conduct gained the confidence of the officers of the penitentiary; and by the time he was released, he had even attracted the attention of the best citizens of Frankfort; and instead of returning to his old home, he sent for his family, settled near the walls of his late prison, commenced life anew.

He had just closed his charge to the grand jury and commenced the call of his docket, when a most furious uproar was heard in the jail below, the sounds from which seemed to reverberate with accumulated force in the court hall: "Silence! Sheriff, keep silence," cried the Judge. "Silence, gentlemen! keep silence!" cried the Sheriff, in a loud commanding tone. The Judge renewed the call of the docket—engle, loud snatches of prayer, shouts and hallooings, came up from the prisoner's cell. The Judge sprung from his seat, stamped, took several strides across the floor, and cried: "Sheriff, bring that rascal into court!"

The Sheriff obeyed the order, and the prisoner greeted the Judge with a profound bow, and remarked, in the most submissive tone: "May it please your honor, I do not think you would reach my case so soon. I thought that the grand jury had to find a true bill before a prisoner could be brought to trial."

"Scoundrel!" shouted the Judge. "I do not have you brought up for trial, but to make you stop that infernal noise!" "Noise! Oh, I remember Judge, I ask your honor's pardon. You know there is a great religious excitement now prevailing in the country, and like yourself, Judge, I am a very excitable man. I was, at the time, laboring under religious excitement." "Scoundrel! don't mock religion in my presence; I'll fine you!"

"Fine and be—d—d, your honor! how will you collect it?" "I'll send you to prison!" "Prison!—I ain't in prison!" The Judge, almost demoralized with rage, sat for a moment silent, and then ordered the "scoundrel" back to prison; but before leaving, the prisoner remarked: "Judge, that prison is a very dry place. You know we all have our weak points. It is mine to become excited and only when dry." The Judge looked daggers, and would no doubt have adjudged court until the next term, rather than comply with the hint, but a friend in court—amicus curia, as the lawyers term it—left hastily, and soon returned, and with the Sheriff, descended into the prisoner's cell; and tradition says the peace of the court was purchased at the rate of a tickler of whisky per day.

But this story is a digression ahead of our history, and we will return to the old records of the county court, and our readers will be surprised at the immense territory sometimes assigned to surveyors of roads. One, for instance, was given all the hands between Green river, Rough and Muddy creeks, with the hands living on Indian camp, to keep his road in repair; whilst another was given all the hands between the Ohio river and Panther creek for a like purpose.

The first letters of administration ever granted, were in February, 1804, to David Glenn on Charles Travis' estate. It seems remarkable that nearly five years should elapse before such a thing became necessary. Was it the extraordinary health of the settlers? or did they have nothing to be administered? Perhaps both these reasons may be assigned.

In 1806 an upper and lower precinct, or place of voting, seems to have been troops are stationed. We will in a few days, as soon as the water will admit, visit these forts, and the country west of them, which is very sparsely settled.

Fort Concho, Captain B. F. Foster, of Ohio county, Kentucky, is in command, to whom we have letters of introduction from the Adjutant General, and with him and his scouts we expect to have a nice time prospecting in the Indian country.

We are preparing an extensive and complete report of our travels and observations in Texas, copies of which we will send you when completed. It will embrace a description of each section of the State and its adoption to the wants of our people who contemplate coming here with the expectation of making it their permanent homes. We do not advise any to come, but to those who have made up their minds to seek homes elsewhere, we do say that no country in the world offers such inducements as Texas. There are men here in the State from Scotland investigating the extent of her cattle raising, in order that they may know what effect it may have upon their own market, in furnishing cattle to the contending parties in Europe, who are now at war with each other. Texas is larger than continental Europe, and is able to sustain fifty million souls. What a future for this great State soon can we foresee.

I will write you again soon.

Point Pleasant, Ky.

Point Pleasant, Ohio Co., Ky., May 14, 1877. Editor Herald: I will send you a few jottings.

The farmers are getting along with their work very well thus far. Our old neighbor, John P. Rowe, complains of finding very much in the rear with his fishing arrangements. It appears that the fish nibble occasionally. I hope Mr. Rowe will get more fish bites and less from the nibble occasionally.
