TURNING THE NEW LEAF.

A Few Suggestions Regarding This Time-Honored Custom.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Jan. 1, 1889.

My DEAR COUSIN:—I was just thinking with what a wonderful degree of self-satisfaction persons announce that they have turned over a new leaf. How little signification the expression has; how much it is intended to convey. What a pity, the leaves will not allow themselves to be turned at our pleasure. How sad, that when each leaf is filled and turned by the Reolator, our resolutions have too often been gathered by little snags and wafled abroad, and the three are crowned with laurels, that make success easier in the future. But in measuring the forces essential for conducting an engagement, would it not be wise to survey the most powerful elements of the contending agency? Of these two are particularly worthy of note—contentment and ridicule. The first cuts deeply, and is a favorite weapon with those who are opposed, at all times to good resolutions, or any other moral good.

It is a very severe trial for a young person, who has resolved to attain some higher end, and has stepped beyond the ranks of his associates, to pass them on the street, and instead of a friendly salute, be greeted with a sneer or sardonic smile. If this fails to have the desired effect, its extreme boldness is manifested with cunning and sagacity, and generally reaches the mark through the third party, often professing friendship, and from this side it is still more penetrating. Shakespeare applies ridicule aptly in this style:

"I tell thee what, Antonio, I love thee, and it is my love that speaks; There are a sort of men, whose visage Do cross and mantle like a standing pond, And do a willful stiffness entertain, With purpose to be dressed in opinion Of wisdom, gravity and profound conceit, As when I see my lips, let no dog bark!"

There are very few indeed, who are not susceptible to treatment of this kind, and the surest way to avoid its influence is to shun such association, or when forced in lamb's clothing, to laugh the application off. There is no surer sign you have taken a higher plane than the derision of those you have left in the back ground.

Reasoning in this way, while the expression, "turning over a new leaf," is often spoken too lightly, and without having considered either the cause or effect, and is blotted from the beginning, good resolutions, weighed philosophically, are a power of strength in themselves. They show an appreciation of some of the higher qualities with which mankind is gifted, no matter whether they are exerted in throwing off the evil influences of indulgence, that are depreciating and enslaving, or whether they originate from a desire to understand and take advantage of the beautiful laws by which an individual may govern himself. In either case, they point to the fact that one is undecided, as if the presumption that anyone is faultless, and having been convinced of this, is imbued with a liberality toward others that is charitable, and is freed, to a great extent, from indulging in petty criticisms. How amusing, to the sensible world, is the inveterate critic. If time and space did not forbid, it might be entertaining and profitable to peruse, at length, the annals of this miserable individual. But charity would be more in keeping with the subject. Not the mere bestowal of alms to the poor, but charity in its more beautiful sense. Making allowances for those who are weak in some particular quality, that you are blessed with strength. To one who has resolved to battle successfully with the vanities and cares of life, lend assistance in guiding on the armor. In the hour of solitude, when the warmth of hope has been almost extinguished by the cold and dampness of the surroundings, and all seems wrapped in darkness, whisper softly that "there's a silver lining to every cloud" and reap the reward in the pleasure of the light kindled and radiated by your charity, and the satisfaction that you have been instrumental in keeping a new leaf turned.

Your affectionate cousin,
LORRAC.

The wife of John E. Meeks, of Louisville, has presented him with twins. They have now twenty living children—18 girls and two boys. He is 49 years old and his wife 44. A peculiarity of Mr. Meeks' household is that two cradles have been going since the first two years of his marriage, and he has never had but one doctor's bill.

Underneath the Ocean.

(Golden Arroyo.)

At a recent meeting of the National Academy of Science in New York, Prof. A. E. Verrill, of Yale College, described the physical and geological character of the sea-bottom off our coast, especially that which lies beneath the Gulf Stream. "The depths of the ocean teem with life. Sharks are seen by thousands, and countless dolphins; but it seems that not a fishbone is dredged up once a year, but it is honeycombed by the boring shell fish, and falls to pieces at the touch of the hand. This shows that destruction is constantly going on in these depths. If a ship sinks at sea with all on board, it would be eaten by fish with the exception of the metal, and that would corrode and disappear. Not a bone of a human body would remain after a few days. It is a constant display of the law of the survival of the fittest. Nothing made by the hand of man was dredged up after cruising for months in the track of the ocean vessels excepting coal cinders shored overboard from steamships. As to the quantity of light at the bottom of the sea there has been much dispute. Animals dredged from below seven hundred fathoms either have no eyes, or faint indications of them, or else their eyes are very large and protruding. Another strange thing is that if the creatures in these lower depths have any color it is of orange or red or reddish orange. Sea anemones, corals, shrimp and crabs have this brilliant color. Sometimes it is pure red or scarlet, and in many specimens inclines toward purple. Not a green or a blue is found. The orange red is the fish's protection, for the bluish-green light in the bottom of the ocean makes the orange or red fish appear of a neutral tint, and hides it from its enemies. Many animals are black, others neutral in color. Some fish are provided with boring tails, so that they can burrow in the mud. Finally, the surface of the submarine mountains is covered with shells, like a sea-beach, showing that it is the eating house of vast shoals of carnivorous animals. A codfish takes a whole oyster into its mouth, cracks the shells, digests the meat, and spits out the rest. Crabs crack the shells and suck out the meat. In that way come whole mounds of shells that are dredged up."

Your face is marked with blotches. And eruptions mar your skin. You may bet your bottom dollar. There is something wrong within. 'Tis the blood. To purify it, and bring it to its normal good. As the G. M. D. is tried!

To be clearly understood, I will explain that G. M. D. means "Golden Medical Discovery" (Dr. Pierce's) the popular remedy for debility, lung troubles, and weak impoverished blood, which, like scrofula, shows its presence in the system in blotches, eruptions, and pimples.

THE STOLEN LACES

An Episode in the History of Chicago Crime.

FROM THE DIARY OF DETECTIVE DENIS SIMMONS, OF THE BANK DETAIL OF THE CENTRAL STATION.

VII.

The lads seemed stupefied by their arrest. Young Landgraf, who was addressed as "captain" by the others, was particularly cast down. He sat on the cot for several hours after he was placed in the cell staring at the wall with vacant eyes.

Next morning the expression of unutterable misery was still on his face. He turned to Simmons, who entered the cell with a substantial breakfast for him, and said, in a hollow voice:

"Mr. Simmons, will you do me a favor?"

"Yes, answer me, promptly, 'if it is anything in reason.'"

"Who was it gave us away?"

The touch of anxiety in this query struck Simmons as peculiar. He did not reply immediately, and Landgraf continued, still more anxiously:

"Tell me if it was a woman."

Simmons glanced reverently to the lady who furnished the clue about the lace. Thinking the lad had some strong motive in seeking this information, he answered that it was a woman.

"I thought so," said the boy gloomily, and then, brightening up suddenly: "Let Curly and the others come in; we may have some news for you."

Curly, Mott and Herman were brought into the cell. The captain looked at them sadly and said:

"I told you so."

"No," exclaimed the lads; "she'd never do that."

"It's true," Mr. Simmons says so," said Landgraf, tears glistening in his eyes, which he resolutely brushed away with his coat cuff.

"Landgraf is right," said Denis, bewildered at the turn of affairs, but surmising that an interesting disclosure was imminent; "she furnished the clue."

"What do you propose, captain?" asked Curly.

"Revenge," exclaimed Landgraf, fiercely.

"Yes, that's right," said the others in chorus. "Let's make a clean breast of it, and let the traitress take equal chances with us."

"This is getting decidedly interesting," said Denis to himself. "I wonder who she is, and what she has to do with these lads."

"Mr. Simmons," Landgraf said, with an air of dignity which was rather amusing, "if you will kindly furnish me with pen, ink and paper I will draw up a statement about those robberies and furnish you with information which will be of great service to you."

Denis readily complied with this request, after removing the others to their respective cells.

In an hour the statement was prepared, and an astonishing document it proved. It was a full confession of the long series of burglaries which had been committed so much trouble. But the most remarkable passages related to the connection of Lawyer Claypole and Mrs. Claypole with the gang.

Landgraf told how himself and colleagues had been worked upon by this estimable couple. "She told us fairy tales," he said, "and we fell for them. I fell in love with her, and she said she'd have my very life if I would marry her. She engineered the burglaries, and we acted under her instructions. He put up this street peddling fall, and we kept piles of stuff in the walk in his office in Dearborn street. He didn't always do the square thing, but we were bamboozled by his wife, who promised everything to make matters run smooth and easy like. Now that she's squealed, we think it nothing but fair that we should tell all about the snags, so that she may get the same deal as we got. The Mendelssohn job was done for Mrs. Claypole. She wanted to get square with a fellow named 'Red,' who had been saying rough things about her, and she started the yarn that he helped the Dutchman to rob himself. She took me to the store one day and gave me prints about the lace that were best to take. She had a trunk full of the stuff. We weren't so very bad boys, but we were doing a bad job. 'Red' was a run-up fellow, and when we were out peddling. This is all a true story, and we give it away so that you may know your own friends, and go down where she belongs, for playing false with poor boys who loved and lost her."

Simmons read this curious epistle with to Miss Goggles with his people; Curly, taking the advice of Denis Simmons when he perched his term at the Bridewell, enlisted in the United States Army, and Herman, who turned out a very hard case, is doing a ten years' term at Joliet.

VIII.

And what of Miss Goggles? The inquisitive spinster paid dearly for her vigil at the tramcar. For several weeks she hovered between life and death. During her spells of delirium she screamed out confusedly about daggers and pistols and new made graves, and said she was going to be buried alive.

When she was convalescent the boarders noticed a change in her demeanor. She was quiet and subdued, and her shrill voice had lost the sharp ring which added harshness to her bitter sentences. She did not interest herself as much in the affairs of her neighbors. Her spirit of prying inquisitiveness seemed to be broken, and more than one of the neighbors remarked: "Miss Goggles has greatly improved since her illness."

Mr. Johnson, it was noticed, kept silent on the subject, but his kindly brown eyes were forever fixed on the thin, pale face of the spinster as though he were trying to read the secret of her reformation.

Miss Goggles' sudden seizure and subsequent dangerous condition had drawn attention from the deplorable conduct of Mrs. Claypole, and that attractive lady was permitted to enjoy her flirtations in peace.

Interest was not revived in her again until the arrest of the boy burglars, and then there was a sensation in the Frelinghuysen boarding house.

Mr. Hadley, who for personal reasons kept pace with the movements of the police in the lace robbery, started the boarders at dinner the day after the arrests by rushing in, excitedly shouting:

"I told you so!"

"I told you what?" asked Mr. Johnson, scowling at the agitated lady.

"Why, that she was no good."

"Ah! that's very explicit," sarcastically remarked the old gentleman, causing a titter round the board; "and who may she be?"

"Mrs. Claypole," shrieked Hadley almost frantically, as he dropped into his seat and violently attacked the soup.

This declaration had a curious effect. Every knife and fork dropped on the instant, and all eyes were fixed on Hadley, and ten voices, blended with intense curiosity, exclaimed:

"Why 'tis she the matter?"

This was one of the supreme moments in the clerk's life. He dropped his table-spoon, mounted on a chair, and addressed the boarders in a half oratorical, half hysterical fashion, as follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—You all know me and how I have suffered. The thieves have been caught; a confession has been made; Mr. and Mrs. Claypole are implicated. She was not so much of a flirt as I thought. The nicely dressed, curly headed boy who called her mother was the captain of the gang. He was a peddler. She tried to spoil my character. The officers are looking for her, and she will be caught if they catch her, and I shall marry my darling Ophelia. And—"

Here Hadley broke down, dropped into a chair, and buried his head in his hands, while his frame shook with convulsive sobs.

There was intense excitement in the dining room. Miss Goggles shrieked: "I know it!"

"Henrietta!" cried Mr. Johnson, in amazement, bending on her a look of earnest inquiry.

The spinster became confused, but repeated, hysterically:

"I know it!"

Then broke out a gable of conversation, during which the spinster's significant remark was forgotten, and the whole story was drawn out piecemeal from Hadley. Every one seemed delighted with the disclosures which had overtaken the audacious blonde and her blind Irish husband, and the regrets being that they had left the house before the officers arrived to arrest them.

In the parlor that evening Mr. Johnson and Miss Goggles sat in earnest conversation long after the rest of the boarders had retired.

"And this was the cause of your ill news," Mr. Johnson was saying, as he moved his chair a little nearer the spinster.

"Yes, I was frightened out of my wits by the young man's ferocious threats," she replied meekly.

"And you never intended to meddle with other people's affairs again?" he asked tenderly.

"Never."

"You are the woman I've been looking for all my life. Curiously, woman's great effort falling, seems entirely crushed out of you. I am yours, will you be married?"

Miss Goggles did not faint. She threw herself into Mr. Johnson's arms, and they sealed the betrothal with a kiss.

THE END.

The Girl of To-day.
(Henderson Journal.)

The girl of to-day is raised up in the parlor to be an ornament, and nothing more. She knows nothing of the kitchen; the place is a death-trap to her. She knows nothing of the art of cookery, and never proposes to learn it, except circumstances force her to do it, as, for instance, she marries some young blood who turns out to be poorer than a church mouse, and therefore she has to do without a cook; then she goes into the kitchen, and with a good deal of grunting and finger-burning, manages to scrape up a meal barely fit for a dog. Our girl belongs to the parlor. You can always find her there when she is not laying abed or shooting through the principal streets, flirting with drummers or flashy dressed clerks, who live miserably on a salary of $400 a year. Her education consists of a few lessons in grammar, latin, music and drawing. She contemplates nothing. A year after she graduates she remembers nothing but her school flirtations. As a musician she is a nuisance. She studies not as an art, but an accomplishment. The result is that she not only succeeds in murdering music, but the poor victims who are often compelled to listen to her suffer too. She can dance, she can flirt, she can make love as no other girl in the world can; but when I have said that, I have said all that can be said in her favor. She is beautiful, charming and interesting, but she is an ornament, and you can make no more of her. If you can afford to build a fine house, furnish it with rich and costly furniture, keep horses and carriages and a groom to keep them in order, by all means marry our girl. She can spend your money as the girl of no other country can. She can play queen to perfection, and will not only master your household affairs, but master you. But if you are poor don't do it. You cannot help falling in love with our girl, but study the expense you will be forced into in case you make her your wife; if you see you can't well make the race, can't keep her and a hired girl too, then take my advice and marry the hired girl.

Advertising Pays.
(Exchange.)

Mr. John Wamaker, the great merchant has the following to say concerning the value of advertising:

"When I came to my desk last Wednesday morning," said John Wamaker, the merchant, "I was naturally thinking about the Christmas trade which we had. We did a great deal of Christmas business in this store this year. During the ten days previous to Christmas our sales hovered about $100,000 a day. The grand total for the ten days fell only a few dollars under a million."

"I spent $5,000 a week in advertising, and I pay a skillful man—a former newspaper editor, and a good one—$1,000 a month to do it for me. I make money by it. Advertising is the leverage with which this store has been raised up. I did not see how it could be done without liberal advertising. Continuous advertising, like continuous work, is the most effective."

Is Consumption Incurable?
Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and now on my third bottle, and able to overcome the work on my face. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewater, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Trouble. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at Z. Wayne Griffin & Bro's Drug Store.

A Domestic Fairy Tale.
Wife—Do you think, darling? Husband—Done to a fine, pet. Wife (hesitates)—how is the coffee? Husband—Perfection. Wife (triumphantly)—Not so good as your mother used to make? Husband (calmly)—My mother never knew how to make coffee at all, precious.

Are we to Have Another War?
Some political prophets aver that we shall be the cause of it. The world is being waged by medicine science against disease will never cease until we arrive at that utopian epoch when the human family shall consist of the afflicted and the healthy. One of the most potent weapons which the armory of medicine furnishes, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters which is of specific utility in all family ailments, as it is adapted to the immediate relief and ultimate cure of those disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels which are of constant occurrence. Indigestion, biliousness and constipation are inseparable companions, and these ailments are completely eradicated by its action in these, as in the other complaints, being characterized by unequalled thoroughness. jan.
