suspicion should fall upon its owner, and fortune had favored his plans. Had not Fitzgerald informed, George Fenton would have been hanged on what seemed an absolutely convincing circumstantial evidence.

George gave his evidence that on the night in question he had parted from the woman after high words. He had again implored her to marry him, and she had refused, again entreating him to leave her forever. He had reproached her for her heartlessness, and his heated words had been heard by passersby, giving a terrible interpretation to the tragedy that followed.

Other evidence as to Mr. Keighley Gates was forthcoming. Among the great scoundrels of modern times this consummate villain is worthy of a high place.

It seems he had made a small fortune in the African diamond fields and had returned to England to add to it by less creditable exertions.

Under the name of Arthur Durant he had taken a shooting box in the country for the purpose of robbery, and this scheme was carried to a successful issue after his runaway marriage with Lady

"Thank God you have come back to me!" Florence Mostyn. After some months, passed in carrying out various robberies up and down the country, he appeared in London as a man of leisure under the name of Keighley Gates.

By getting rid of his beard and wearing false teeth, he effected a complete disguise, and his wealth and pleasant manners gained him both friends and popularity.

One mistake he made in clumsily tampering with the photograph in the Scotland Yard album. As we have seen, the police fixed the abstraction of the photograph upon him, and it may be that this would have led to his ultimate apprehension even if Fitzgerald had not informed upon him.

The absolute depravity of the man was shown by his cold blooded entrapment of Lady Florence Mostyn. He gained her love in the guise of an honest man, and then dragged her into his life of villainy. When she had discovered his true character and fled from him, he pursued her and cast his meshes about her brother, and even after the murder he did not scruple to use him as his tool.

He allowed nothing to stand in his way, and when it seemed to his immediate advantage he did not hesitate to hand over his accomplice, Fitzgerald, to the law.

By a singular train of events this led to his own undoing, and the man who had carried his schemes with such a high hand was eventually hounded down by the one man who had witnessed his devilish murder and whom he had betrayed.

Keighley Gates was found guilty of murder, without any recommendation to mercy, and was condemned to death. But he cheated justice after all. He was found dead in bed in the condemned cell—poisoned.

How he managed to secure the poison will never be known.

George sought out Dick Lambert, and for his sister's sake tried to give him another start in life. The terrible thought that he had been the friend and tool of his sister's murderer overwhelmed the man with remorse, and will probably keep him straight for the remainder of his life.

Fitzgerald stood his trial in due course, and in consideration of his instrumentality in aiding justice, whereby an unmitigated scoundrel was traced and an innocent man saved from death, he was leniently treated. But 12 months' hard labor will no doubt enable him to revise his ethical code.

Some two months after I regained consciousness I was married to the sweetest woman in the world, and in our happiness we forget the terrible days that followed the murder of Lady Florence Mostyn with the Venetian glass dagger.

THE END.

Electric Handlebars.

The cyclist can now take a course of electric treatment on his machine, says invention. A new handlebar has been brought out which has metallic grips connected with a small generator mounted on one of the wheels. In another form of the same device shoes are provided with contact plates. If the force of the current depends upon the speed the wheels are rotating, this may be a satisfactory device to discourage rearing.

Three Brave Irishmen.

The three greatest living British soldiers are from the green island. Lord Wolseley was born in Ireland. Lord Roberts, of Candahar, was born in India of Irish parentage; Lord Kitchener, of Khartoum, was born in good old County Kerry in 1850 and was baptized at Aghavolla.

Codfish in the Penobscot.

Codfishes weighing 26 pounds have been caught lately in the Penobscot river, whence their species disappeared 80 years ago, driven away by sawdust from the saw-mills.

Born on Saturday, Jan. 21 to Mr. and Mrs. S. Montgomery a girl. All doing well. We congratulate.

Geo. Wilson and son, Elmer of Denison township were up this way on business last Saturday morning.

We learn that Harry Fink has purchased the 160 acres called the Seagrave place located on the divide between the Boyer and Big Creek.

B. Nicewanner of Denison gave a magic lantern entertainment at the McAhren school house on Tuesday evening to a fair sized crowd.

The secretary of the school board, H. N. Snell has received notice from the Illinois Central to have the school house in district number 6 moved. A meeting of the directors will soon be held to decide the matter.

We notice by the proceedings of the board that the compensation of the assessor of our township is limited to 24 days at $2.00 per day, which is very small pay considering the amount of labor involved. While the assessor is earning his $48 by traveling over 36 sq. miles of territory our county officers are earning $125 sitting by the fire. No doubt this is a fulfillment of the pledge made by the democrats to "practice a rigid economy" (as long as it does not conflict with the county-seat officers.)

JACKSON JOTTINGS.

John Kelly is erecting a wind-mill for D. Brotherson this week.

Wm. Piper of Milford township is visiting Jackson friends this week.

Steve Finigan of Auburn, who has taken a mile contract of grading on the new C. & N. W. R'y, made Jackson a business call Saturday.

The stock feeders of this vicinity find it almost impossible to secure oil meal at any price for their cattle. The dealers claim it scarce throughout the country.

The question, "Resolved that it is a detriment to the United States to hold the Philippine islands was argued at the lyceum last Friday evening. The affirmative received the strongest argument.

We are glad to learn of the good success of Wm. Enebach who has just returned from Cherokee, Iowa, where he has been taking treatment for a cancer. He returned home a few days ago entirely cured.

We learn that Thos. McAlpin, who left last week for Chicago stopped off in Scott county and was united in marriage to Miss Annie McVey. We also understand that Mr. McAlpin and wife intend making their future home in Chicago, where he will be employed by the Deering machine company. Many years of happiness are the wishes of Jackson friends.
