Last Wednesday morning about six o'clock the fire bell roused many from their slumbers. It was discovered that the calaboose was on fire. At eleven o'clock the night before Marshal Kent put an unknown man into this building as said man asked for a bed. The man was so intoxicated that much effort was required to get him to the cooler. At two o'clock a fire was started in the stove and Mr. Kent noticed that everything was all right and that the man was sleeping soundly. At five Mr. Kent went to see that all was right. Live coals were in the stove and the stranger was still asleep as seen by Mr. Kent from the outside through the window grating. On unlocking the door of the cooler the stranger was seen sitting in the corner where the fire was supposed to have originated. It was soon discovered that his hands and face were badly burned and further examination revealed the awful fact that the man was dead. How the fire started will always be a mystery. A coroner's inquest was held Wednesday afternoon when it was decided that he came to his death by his own efforts. From what was found on his person it shows that his name was probably John Napp of Danbury, Conn. He was buried in the Dow City cemetery Thursday. Dow City has certainly had her share of casualties within the last six months.
