THE ATTAINMENT of ANARCHY.

Count Leo Tolstoi says in a recent letter that all governments are tyrannies. He states that no man should be obliged to pay taxes unless he wishes, and that no man should be compelled to take any part in the support of a government of which he does not fully approve. He claims that the tyranny of the majority in the United States is just as cruel and unjust as the tyranny of the Czar in Russia. In other words he believes that government with the consent of the governed does not exist in any country to-day. In his last premise the distinguished Russian is right. The very meaning of the word "govern" implies that one will is subject to another, it implies that some one must give up his ideas and impulses to the control of some other.

The Supreme Being has seemed in a measure to sanction a state of anarchy. He laid down certain great natural laws and gave to the world that awful sentence, "The wages of sin is death", but aside from these injunctions He left us with free will and the absolute power for good or evil.

Anarchy is then the natural state of man and it is the state to which the world will return when the millenium comes. If men were not disposed to evil there would be no need for government, but such is the case, there is a necessity for the better element to protect itself against from those evilly inclined and out of this grows government. Like any other engine of human construction, perfect government has never been attained. It is a tyranny and always will be. The extent of the tyranny is the only question involved. The tyranny of the majority is less galling than other forms, for one feels that he has had opportunity and may have opportunity again to reverse the ruling if he can persuade a sufficient number that he is in the right. The American people have learned quietly to submit to the tyranny of the majority, but at the same time they resent any fictitious aid, or any force which gives to a minority the power of a majority.

For instance, we would have no quarrel with the South because it is democratic, were it not that the supposed majority does not exist in fact, and that the minority is kept in power by force and intimidation. Every law is a tyranny, but the tyranny of a just law is no hardship to the man who does right. We do not wonder that Tolstoi resents the unjust and unfounded tyranny of the Czar and of the Greek church, but his doctrine is dangerous if applied generally and no distinction is made between just and necessary tyranny and that which is unjust and unnecessary. The first form of tyranny was that of brute force, this form of tyranny is copied from the brutes and is to a large extent the foundation of such forms of government as that of Russia. Gradually mind overcame matter and we find the tyranny of mind asserting itself over and commingling with the tyranny of force. It is a sad commentary upon the progress of man that the tyranny of force is so often appealed to.

There is that in man which often rebels from the tyrannies of life. His emotions, his passions, often his conscience, urge rebellion. He simply desires however to impose the tyranny of his will for the tyranny of others and in the long run the world would be no better, and he himself would be no better for the change. The best way to work against the tyranny of law is to make law unnecessary, to elevate the standard of men and morals so that they may need no restraining power. Then, just as certain laws have become "dead letters" because they are no longer needed, government will become a dead letter and the ideal of individual liberty will be reached. We should strive, therefore, not against the tyranny of law and government, but against the depravity of man which makes law and government necessary.

A NOTE OF WARNING.

The republican papers of Iowa should be very careful not to say intemperate things during the heat of the ante-convention canvass. The deadly parallel column is one of the most disagreeable chickens that can come home to roost. The democratic press is taking the part of wisdom in urging on the bitterness; that is, they are displaying what is generally considered good politics. Many democratic papers are supporting Mr. Cummins; of course they will not support him if he is nominated, but they hope by their course to provoke the anti-Cummins press to say that about him which they can use in case he should be nominated. In the same way they are urging the Cummins press to rabid utterance so that should he fail of the nomination they will have ample ammunition at hand to use against the successful man. The republican editor who bites at this sort of a three shell game is not wise. The Review has been an impartial observer of the campaign thus far and expects to remain so to the end of the contest. It does not blame any man for advocating the nomination of a friend, but it would most urgently sound a note of warning against the wholesale denunciations and incriminations which have become so popular. Let us not forget that we are all republicans and that we have a common political enemy to meet. Let us be frank. There is a Cummins faction and an anti-Cummins faction. Both are presumably organized for effective work. Therefore both are "machines," if that word is to be applied to political organizations. Both factions seek the aid of influential men, but neither side is for that reason to be considered bound hand and foot to a corporation. For years Iowa has pursued a just policy toward the various corporations. It is not the purpose of Iowa legislators to so handicap capital by populist restrictions that it will seek other fields of investment; neither has it been the policy to allow corporate interests to oppress the people. We prophecy that whoever may be nominated for governor this wise policy will not be departed from. It is just as proper for any candidate to seek the support of Mr. Blythe or Mr. Hubbard as it is to seek the support of Carroll Wright or Mr. Wheeler. There is no crime involved. They are all men of brains, intelligence and influence and were we a candidate we should be glad to receive the support of them all. We can understand the intemperance of the so-called independent and democratic press, but the republican paper which so far forgets its duty to its party as to indulge in unjust attacks and insinuations should call a halt at once.

Mr. W. J. Bryan has had another attack of mental dyspepsia over the recent ruling of the supreme court in the Porto Rico cases. Mr. Bryan is subject to these attacks and although the people have twice administered chloroform and have used the surgeon's knife with much nicety and precision they have failed of a cure, although they have succeeded in placing him in such quarantine that he is comparatively harmless. For ten years has he predicted "demnition bow-wows" for this country and except for the brief period when his party was in control all of these prophecies have proven false. Such a record would be enough to jar the nerve of any man and Mr. Bryan is more to be pitied than condemned.

The country has shown the most obstinate perversity in continuing to prosper in spite of Mr. Bryan. We have really been inconsiderate, occasionally some business has failed or prices have temporarily fluctuated and have given Mr. Bryan some grains of comfort, but in the main his life has been one barren, desert waste of glittering prosperity. Once, it is said, Mr. Bryan visited the poor house of one of our larger cities and the effect most beneficial. Mr. Bryan was comparatively cheerful for at least two weeks and said to his chum Caswell that in his rosy dreams he could see this whole country one vast poor house with himself as boss pauper of the lot. Happy dream, but rude awakening, for just then the factory whistle blew calling the working men to work for ever increasing wages and the rattle of the full dinner pails grated upon his ear.

With withering, burning biting eloquence Mr. Bryan has called Mr. McKinley an emperor. It is a crushing argument, a sort of solar plexus blow and were it not for the knowledge that he has the confidence, esteem and affection of a vast majority of the American people it would indeed be wonderful if Mr. McKinley could recover from it. To Mr. Bryan distorted vision it appears perfectly clear that the supreme court is in collusion with Mr. McKinley and that the end is an empire. Neither is this the first time that Mr. Bryan has been afflicted by the supreme court. That court has been no more considerate of his feelings than has general prosperity. There seems to be a general conspiracy to promote the welfare of this country to the despite and injury of Wm. J. Bryan. The court has decided that this country has a right to control its new possession in a sensible way. This is a direct slap at Mr. Bryan's methods. The supreme court should not have done this thing. It should have asked Mr. Bryan, the devoted advocate of absolute liberty for the Malays of the Philippines and of absolute civil slavery for the colored people of South Carolina, to explain his views and have acted in accordance therewith. Mr. Bryan has not tried to please. We believe that if he could have everything exactly his way he would be fairly well satisfied. As it is the nation must endure the spectacle of this great advocate of liberty, in some sections; raging and tearing his wavy locks, flinging epithets at his betters, acting in many ways like the spanked school-boy who is sure that his teacher is a cruel tyrant, leagued with his parents for the oppression of boykind.

The very meanest thing we have seen about Ben Salinger appears in the Scranton Journal, which quotes him as saying, "Garst has did too much for me." We have heard Ben accused of many things and he seems to have taken the accusations quite calmly; however, if the charge of murdering the King's English as made by the Journal is not true, he should protect his character by commencing a suit for libel. Much of what they say about Ben may be true, but we cannot believe that he ever said "has did."

The republican campaign in Greene county lacks its usual fire and vigor this year. There are but five candidates for sheriff in the field as yet.

The Jefferson Souvenir maintains that on account of the Carroll county muddle, the senatorial candidate should come from Greene county. What is the matter with Judge Elwood as a compromise candidate?
