AN INNOVATION.
Elegant New Parlor-Dining Cars Between Chicago and Omaha on the Fast Mail.

These combination cars, which have been especially fitted up for service between Chicago and Omaha at the company's shops, are run west bound from Chicago on Fast Mail, train No. 5, and east bound from Omaha and Council Bluffs on the Chicago Express, train No. 4. They are artistic and handsome in design, and convenient in arrangement. They have all the features of a regular dining car and of a Pullman parlor car, the two being in separate compartments and entirely independent one from the other. The dining compartment has a large kitchen and an unobstructed seating capacity of fourteen at the dining tables. The parlor compartment is handsomely decorated, and is equipped with ten heavily upholstered revolving armchairs. These chairs are particularly comfortable, being of a new and special shape designed for these cars. As these trains make the trip across Iowa for the most part by daylight, this innovation in car equipment, in addition to its convenience for through passengers, is especially advantageous for Omaha and Chicago passengers to or from local points.

THE FIREFLY.

On a pleasant, bright June evening they were walking hand in hand in the park. Both were young and beautiful. The girl was leaning her head on his shoulder, he stooping from time to time for the purpose of pressing his warm lips to her light hair, plainly combed over her forehead.

Suddenly in the thicket among the fragrant jasmynes a vibrating light appeared, followed by another, then by a third, still clearer, and finally winged, greenish swarms of sparks surrounded them.

"Look! The lightning bugs!"
"How pretty, mysterious and light!"
"The are vibrating as an inexplicable word of love, and they are burning as passion breaking its ties."

"Look! This one is hanging upon your forehead; that one is your guiding star."

"And the other above shines greenish, like your eyes when you are cross. I would like, my only one, to make of these stars an aureole about your light head."

A silvery laugh spread itself in the secluded path.

"And it seems to me it is the third act of 'Robert the Devil.' The pentitent souls are burning. We were walking in the cemetery."

"No; this is not a cemetery. It is the summit of life and earthly happiness. I love you!" And he stopped in order that in the dark he might read from the light of her shining eyes a cordial answer.

They were much in love with each other faithfully and sincerely.

They went farther, silently, in the mysterious shadows of the walk, but involuntarily the memory of the cemetery, as it were, caused between them a shadow of sorrow and thought, the cloud which, even under the melting influence of the words, "I love you," did not want to disappear. Death is stronger than love, and loneliness deeper than happiness. They went farther, looking at the phosphoric sparks.

The girl suddenly lifted her head and whispered softly:

"Do you know that this moment the reminiscence of a woman whom you have loved once stands between us? Is it not true?"

She divined. She was accustomed to thinking and feeling in harmony with him. At once, by intuition, she came upon the face of a person unknown to her, a stranger of rival thought. He shivered, embraced her more tightly and stood still for awhile.

"Let's go farther," she said.
"Listen. I will tell you all."
"Why, I love you and believe."
"Listen. Between us there is this one last secret, troubling, annoying my mind as a nightmare, and I shall not rid myself of this pale ghost of the far-away past unless I tell you all."

"Did you love her?" she asked, with a nervous vibration of voice.

"She was handsome as a Greek cameo and always smiling as a goddess of happiness. She was curious, proud, passionate, of an artistic nature. She fascinated me, drew me to her, intoxicated me. When she took in her white, cold hands my head, my temples burned, and when she sang in the voice of a siren I felt that my will and strength were falling."

"Did you love her?" asked the girl nervously.

"It seemed to me that her love must be the greatest happiness on earth, and that I would then give my life to guess the conundrum of her deep, black eyes."

"Look," said he, after awhile, as if gathering his thoughts and showing her the lighted, shining and moving mass in the thicket, "and listen to the reminiscences of the long gone years of my childhood. I was for the first time in the country, and for the first time, on a warm evening, I saw lightning bugs shining with a sharp, greenish light in the dark thicket of the park. Child of the city, excited by unaccustomed sights, I chased the moving light and wished to possess such a star, to look at it while it was near and to take it for my own. A chase was made, and one of the handsomest bugs was tightly shut in glass. Charmed, I took my treasure, placed it in my room near my bed, and in the night I dreamed of a gigantic sun throwing light on all the paths and thickets of the garden."

"In the morning I was awakened by the first rays of dawn. I looked at once in the direction of the glass palace; but, instead of the imprisoned star, there appeared to me—only a miserable, black bug!"

"But she, the woman whom you loved?" asked the girl impatiently.

"She was an enchantress, with the voice of a siren, an artist by blood and flesh, a dark eyed and tempting problem, but only in the twilight of our mysterious love, in the overheated, sick and languid imagination of mind. Her Greek profile and smile of a sphinx needed an unnatural light and sparkling animation, an artificial spurt. In the usual surroundings, in the light of day and truth of life, strong and sincere sentiments, sacrifices and pity, she was only a black bug."

He leaned over, and in dumb and warm homage he pressed her hands to his lips.

"You are crying, my dear. Why? Indeed you love and believe?"
She was silent awhile, then answered with a hearty vibration of pity in her voice:
"I pity the dark bug. Perhaps—perhaps it also has a soul!"

Winding Timepieces.

"I have been doing a little figuring on time," remarked an erratic citizen yesterday, "and I have reached some rather interesting conclusions. I wanted to find out how much time man consumed in keeping tab on time, and I found that, if the whole world is considered in the computation, years would be crowded into a second of time."

"To illustrate what I mean, take a city where 100,000 watches are wound up every day. Now, it takes probably an average of 15 seconds to wind a watch. It would take, then, 1,500,000 seconds to wind 100,000 watches. This would mean 25,000 minutes or 530 hours and 10 minutes, or 25 days and 16 hours. I suppose there are in the city of New Orleans 100,000 watches and clocks to be wound up every day, so that nearly a month is spent in the city every day in winding watches and clocks."

"One man in a year's time would consume 5,475 seconds in winding his watch if he is prompt about it and is willing to give 15 seconds every day to this useful article. This would mean several hours during every year that he kept up the practice. Allowing 35 years as the average life, a man would spend 191,525 seconds, or 3,190 minutes and 41 seconds, or 530 hours and 10 minutes, or 22 days and 20 hours, in winding his watch."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

What She Saw.

It was at the Normal school that this happened, and the class laughed. It was a laugh on the teacher, too, but he didn't get angry, although it did break into the serious contemplation of serious studies with which he was trying to interest the students.

It was in the study of psychology, and they were discussing what ideas first entered the human mind when certain words were spoken or written—whether the mind thought of one certain object designated by the word or the whole general class which is embodied in that word. To experiment on this mental phenomenon in order to bring it more clearly to the attention of the students the professor said he would write a word on the board and then let one of them tell instantly what impression was made upon her mind.

He called upon one of the pupils to be ready to think quickly and tell exactly what her first thought was after she saw the word which he was about to write. He stood close to the board, so that the word was hidden by his shoulders until he turned. He wrote the word "pig," and all of the class saw it except the girl who was standing ready to make reply. When he turned, he didn't get out of her way, and she couldn't see the word. In reply to his sharp, quick question, "Now, what do you see?" she replied naively, "I see you." And the class laughed.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Advice in His Answers.

The Rev. John McNeill was holding a revival service at Cardiff, Wales, and announced that he would answer any question about the Bible. At once a note was sent up to him reading as follows:

"Dear Mr. McNeill—If you are seeking to help young men, kindly tell me who was Cain's wife?"

"That seemed a poser, and the audience waited with intense interest, tempered with amusement, to see how the good man would extricate himself. After a pause he said:

"I love young men, especially young inquirers for light, and I would give this young man a word of advice. It is this: Don't lose your soul's salvation looking after other people's wives."

The Inventor of the Flouring Mill.

About the year 70 B. C. Mithridates, king of Cappadocia, one of the most ingenious and able princes of the time, invented the first mill driven by water. This triumph of his skill and ingenuity he caused to be erected in the immediate vicinity of the royal palace. In the course of time the Cappadocian bakers became celebrated and were in great demand throughout all parts of the world as then known.

These mills were usually placed upon boats on the river, being so elevated and contrived as to be easily driven by the water, and the millers were thus enabled to move from place to place, distributing the meal to their customers.

A Professional Blunder.

"I am satisfied now that I have made a professional blunder in your case," the physician said, noting the symptoms of his patient.

"A blunder, doctor? Don't I seem to be improving fast enough?"

"You are improving too fast! Your malady had begun to interest me exceedingly, and I wanted to see what it would develop into if allowed to run, but I stupidly gave you a prescription that has knocked it entirely out of your system."—Chicago Tribune.

The Same Old Story.

J. A. Kelly relates an experience similar to that which has happened in almost every neighborhood in the United States and has been told and re-told by thousands of others. The trouble was controlled much quicker than former attacks when I used other remedies. Mr. Kelly is a well known citizen of Henderson, N. C. For sale by C. F. Cassaday & Co., Broadway Pharmacy.
