SPRINGER WARNS PACKERS.

Stockman Says Beef Combine Must Not Be Formed.

Denver, Aug. 5.—John W. Springer, president of the National Live Stock Association of the United States, in answer to a question concerning the formation of a beef combine, answered: "Our great organization is watching every move of the big packers, fully realizing the ruin which would ensue if the contemplated combine is executed. The packers have individually denied any intention of combining into a merger of packing interests. If they are attempting to deceive the stockmen and the public, they will incur the opposition of every live stock producer in the union. Such a combine would be more disastrous than any other which could be formed, for then one man would arbitrarily fix the price to the consumer of meats. It would be against public policy and result in the greatest commercial warfare ever waged in this continent, and in the end the packers' combine would go to the wall. If the packers are wise as I give them credit for, they will let well enough alone. If they deceive us as to their intentions, they will give notice now that it will be a fight of every producer of live stock aided by the consumers of this country, against the most uncalled for combine or trust ever organized. Let the packing interests beware—they may as well understand—the limit has been reached in their grasping strenuousness."

TRAIN CREW PUT TO FLIGHT.

Mob of Enraged Mexicans Makes Attack With Picks and Shovels.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5.—In the yards of the Southern Pacific shops at Los Angeles the life of fourteen-year old Joseph Mirano was accidentally crushed out by the wheels of a car. Acting on the impulse of the moment a hundred Mexican laborers made a rush on the train crew whose engine had caused the accident and with spades, shovels and picks pursued them across the river flats and ravines almost to the east side police station, where the trainmen fled for protection. A switch engine was called out and with a couple of box cars started for the scene of the accident with a squad of policemen and a number of laborers armed with shovels, pick handles and other weapons. On reaching the stock yards the police found the mob had subsided and there was no further demonstration.

MISTERY OF THE SOUTHWEST

BY A. F. BONNEY.

But the strange things discovered with this body were the little image of red pipe stone and a pipe of the same material. The pipe was about four inches long, cylindrical in shape, perfectly straight, and shaped like unto a cigar holder, a form of pipe peculiar to the south-west and California. This stone, Catillite, so named in honor of John Catlin, the explorer, is found nowhere else in the world than the southwest corner of the state of Minnesota; showing the old time people traded with other people so far away. But the most wonderful discovery found in this or any other cliff dwelling, if not anywhere in the United States, was a human skull; a typical cliff dwellers, which had been crushed by a blow, making a hole in the right parietal bone about 1x2 inches in size, irregular and narrow in the center. But more, the skull had been trephined and the patient had recovered as was evidenced by the callous having grown over the cut edge of the bone entirely obliterating the diploe. A small flake of bone no larger than my thumb nail had grown fast to the inner wall of the skull projecting for about one-half its diameter into the opening in the bone.

In the ancient graveyards of Peru are found many skulls showing trephining. Some of the patients died under the surgeon's hands, just they will persist in doing now days. Some lived until the callous was partly formed on the cut edge of the bone; others died. But this is as far as my reading and observation goes, the only instance in the United States where a skull of an aborigine has been found showing an attempt to perform this operation which, with all our skill and knowledge is considered a difficult and dangerous piece of work, and is, I opine, the very boldest feature of modern surgery.

There is an essential difference between trephining as practiced by the cliff dwellers and the ancient Peruvians. The latter operated for thau-maturgic purposes, and, possibly, to secure amulets of bone. Their work was rude, whether performed on the cadaver for mystic purposes or the living captive whose life was considered worthless.

To remove the button of bone deep longitudinal cuts were made with a stone knife or saw. Two of these grooves or cuts were parallel to each other. While, no doubt, this work was considered an operation to secure charms, or to enhance the prestige of the shaman of the tribe, who was at once surgeon, medicine man and priest. I think it subsequently evolved into an operation the purpose of which was to save life.

The one trephined skull found in the home of the cliff dwellers shows, by the method of work, a purpose only to free the brain of the impressing fractured bone. Possibly the shorter wall or angle surface of the cut was sawed; but the larger plane or floor of the opening which joined the other at nearly right angle, and in which the wound hole was situated, had been scraped perfectly smooth as was the surface of the smaller cut. Great care had been exercised as was evidenced by the little flake of bone being left to grow fast to the inner surface of the skull bone. The man upon whom this operation had been performed was not a captive. He was an important member of the tribe. He lived a considerable length of time after the work had been done upon his skull. At the time of his death the "wisdom" teeth were just coming through the bones of the jaws showing him to be less than thirty years of age, and when he died his bones were laid away with those of other members of his tribe or family, which would not have been the case had he been an alien.
