The Value of Singing.

From the medical standpoint singing is a most important exercise both in virtue of its influence on the emotions, on the respiratory movements and on the development of the lungs. Nothing better shows the beneficial effect of singing in developing the chest and warding off the lung diseases than the great pulmonary development and freedom from pulmonary disease among professional singers. Their general health, moreover, is exceptionally good, and this is probably in a large measure attributable to the mere exercise of the calling. It is especially useful in defective chest development and in chronic heart disease. Provided the patient can sing with comfort there is no condition in which singing is contraindicated unless it be a tendency to tuberculosis or aneurismal haemoptysis. It is scarcely necessary to say that the singer should be so clad as to allow absolute freedom of the chest movements, there should be no constriction of the neck or waist, the collar should be low and ample and the stays, if worn, ample and loose.

Mixed Metaphors.

A German lady in a town in Ventura county had a daughter who was her mother's pride. The mamma bears somewhat of a reputation as a Mrs. Malaprop and is also a prosperous merchant. On one occasion the daughter, who assists her mother in the store, was by dint of hard work among relatives and friends chosen as queen of a street carnival to be held in the town. Maternal pride ran riot in the elder woman's breast. To a friend she burst forth in this ecstatic strain:
"Oh, mein Mollie! She was so beautiful as neffer vas! Dere was no gerrel so beautiful as mein Mollie! Und she was sooch a good cook—mein gracious, she was sooch a good cook! Und she was sooch a good tressmaker! Oh, dere was no gerrel like mein Mollie! Und she was de best clerk vat I tter haf in mein shtore! Und she was a good musician! Oh, mein Mollie was de greatest gerrel vat offer vas! She was just a jack of all rabbits!"—Los Angeles Herald.

Rocky Autograph Album.

Probably the oddest and most precious autograph album that has ever existed lies in an almost unknown corner of western New Mexico. More than two centuries before our Saxon forefathers penetrated the desert of the southwest the Spanish pioneers, wandering through those lonely wilds, found a rock so noble and so remarkable, even in a country of wonderful stone monuments, that they called it "El Morro" (The Castle). Wishing to leave some record for future generations, they traced with the points of their swords their names upon its rough surface. Those names are there, with dates of their inscription—in nearly every instance the early part of the seventeenth century.

Paper of the Ancients.

The interior bark of trees was formerly used to write upon, and its Latin name (liber, a bark) seems to intimate that its use was as ancient as the art of writing itself. In one respect the bark was superior to the leaf. It could be rolled into a volume, while the leaf would crack if subjected to such a process.

How Our Ancestors Quarreled.

A study of mediæval rural life is apt to give the impression that the principal part of the life of the people was spent in quarrelling or in the commission or prosecution of offenses. Our ancestors certainly were a very litigious and a very disorderly people. The records teem with instances of men and women drawing knives against one another, of breaking into houses, of prosecuting one another for slander. Then we have such entries as these:
"It is ordained by common consent that all the women of the village must refrain their tongues from all slandering."
"Thomas, son of Robert Smith, is fined 12 pence because his wife Agnes beat Emma, the wife of Robert, the tailor, and Robert, the tailor, six pence because his wife Emma swore at Agnes, the wife of Thomas."
"It is enjoined upon all the tenants of the village that none of them attack any villagers in word or deed, with clubs or arrows or knives under penalty of paying 40 shillings."
Such entries, frequently occurring, in addition to the innumerable instances of individual attack, slander, petty theft and other immorality seem to show a community of far from perfect virtue.—Lippincott's.

English Kings called themselves Kings of France till a century ago, and French kings called themselves kings of Jerusalem until the revolution.

THE GREAT JOKE, DEATH.

Funny Side of Dying Often Treated of in Literature.

"Death," said a publisher, "has been treated humorously in our literature often. Indeed I am quite sure that a collection of many thick volumes might be made under the title of 'Death's Funny Side.' Thomas Hood was one of our best writers of this sort of verse. Don't you remember his ballad on the young sailor who died heart-broken over his girl's unfaith? The last stanza was:
"His death, which happened in his berth,
At forty odd befall;
They went and told the sexton, and
The sexton tolled the bell."
"Hood did another ballad on the subject of a soldier who lost both legs to battle, who was in consequence flitted by his sweetheart and who then hung himself. Now, that is rather tragic, is it not? It has a bizarre but none the less poignant tragic note. Guy de Maupassant indeed once handled almost this same situation, but he handled it from the opposite viewpoint, and don't you remember how he narrated the first, the crucial, meeting of the lovers after Ben Battle's double amputation?
"But when he called on Nellie Gray
She made him quite a scoff,
And when she saw his wooden legs
Began to talk them off."
"This treatment drove Ben to despair:
"So round his melancholy neck
A rope he did entwine
And for the second time in life
Enlisted in the line."
"And there he hung till he was dead
As any nail in town;
For, though despair had cut him up,
It could not cut him down."
"There is a tremendous literature of humorous epigrams. There must be, I fancy, 10,000 of these, but two of them are all I can recall. The first goes:
"Here lies the body of mild Maria;
She went one day to start the fire,
But the wood was green,
So she used kerosene,
And now she's where the fuel is drier."
"The other is grimmer:
"Life is a lie, and all things show it;
I thought so once, and now I know it."
"Then there are songs on the side splitting aspects of death, some of which have caused tender hearted ladies to double up with mirth. Johnny Jones and His Sister Sue' is one such song, and I bet that six people out of ten in America know it by heart.
"Yes," the publisher concluded, "under the title of 'Death's Funny Side' an anthology of many, many volumes could be made. The anthology should be bound in black pigskin, with grinning skulls and crossbones tooled in gold on it."—Philadelphia Record.

GETTING AWAY FROM HOME

The Spirit of Restlessness and the Desire For Change.

Judging by a good deal of the conversation of the present day, there are a large number of people who have a positive horror of home. This curious revulsion of feeling is taken by many persons as a sign of social deterioration. For our own part we find it difficult to take it quite seriously or to see in it anything more than a passing whim.
Nobody nowadays likes monotony. Change is what people desire—not perhaps any great change, but lots of small change; not necessarily for the better, but for its own sake. Now, there is a great sameness about one's own four walls, be they ever so handsome. We all feel at times an overpowering desire to look at something else. We cannot change the patterns or the pictures on them every day, and neither they nor the home furniture ever seems to alter in expression.
Again, there is a terrible sameness about one's own cook. Experience enables us to foretell the taste of everything at home, from the soup to the savory if we are rich and from the nut-ton to the cheese if we are poor; whereas if we dine at a restaurant everything down to the salt is different, and the restaurant is refurbished daily with new faces.
Then, again, the music and stir going on around one avoid the necessity for much conversation, and conversation in the home circle is sometimes difficult and sometimes dull. It does not do always just to say what one thinks, it is such bad practice for dining out, and, this being the case, it is not easy sometimes to think what to say.
Nowadays we get, socially speaking, tired of our friends and even of our acquaintances. We want them to pass continually before us like a street procession. Instead of that they rather resemble a stage crowd and keep coming up again. There is a limit to those we know, a limit even to those we should like or should be likely to know even by sight, and at a restaurant this latter limit is disregarded. The barrier of good manners which forbids that those who are acquainted with one another should speak is sufficient to protect our station or our dignity, but it is not a very high fence, and it is one which it is amusing to look over.—London

President Starts on Trip.

Washington, Nov. 11.—President Roosevelt left Washington last night to be absent nearly two weeks. He was accompanied by Secretary Cortelyou and his physician, Dr. George A. Lung. There also were a corps of servants and secret service officials with the party. The party left Washington on a special train at 12 o'clock for New York.

Mine Promoter Indicted.

Kansas City, Nov. 11.—Theodore Stegner was yesterday indicted on a charge of promoting a mining fraud. A local postoffice inspector presented evidence to the grand jury showing that Stegner advertised shares in an Arizona company for sale, saying the company owned four mines, whereas it controlled but one.
