As a result of his trip he is expecting to receive a call to Detroit most any day this week, and in case he does he will move there with his family. The Doctor's friends will be glad if he is able to secure a good location, but all regret to see this excellent family leave the community.
Next Friday is what is called "Good Friday," and is a day of special observance for Episcopalians. It will be observed in Trinity church this year by the service known as the "Three Hours Commemoration." This service begins promptly at noon, and lasts just three hours. It comprises a varied services of prayers, responses and hymns with time for silent meditation. The addresses are based on the seven last sayings from the Cross. The service is long, but those who attend can come at any time during the service, and can leave during any of the hymns, not being obliged to stay throughout the whole service if not convenient. The event which this day commemorates is one which well claims the notice of Christian people, and an invitation is given to all to attend and take part in this service.
An interesting suit of national repute in which P. W. Harding of this city was attorney for the plaintiff, was brought to a settlement a short time ago by a compromise. The defendant paying $2,100 and costs. The case was one in which the estate of Frank Crum, deceased, of Monona county, was sued by Mary Christiansen, who was his housekeeper, for damages on account of a breach of promise by Crum before his decease. Crum was for many years a widower, and the defendant claimed that he had seduced her under promise of marriage a year before his death, afterward breaking his promise. The case attracted wide attention and everybody was surprised when the jury returned a verdict of $6,000 in favor of the plaintiff. The case was appealed to the supreme court, but had not yet come up for adjudication when it was compromised. It is said the estate was considerably involved, and worth the judgment.
