Incorporated banks are under the control of the State Auditor, who can at any time examine the business, and according to his investigation the published statements are made. SUNDAY SPORTS.

They Used to Be Fostered in England by Royalty.

Both Richard II. and Henry IV. had acts passed ordering Sunday sports, particularly the useful practice of archery. Queen Elizabeth issued licenses to conductors of such festivities, which contained directions to public officers to overlook such games and to do their best to make them a success.

One such document authorized "John Secotoun, a poor man fallen into decay and having four small children, to have and use some plays or games at or upon several Sundays within the county of Middlesex and to remain in one place not above three several Sundays—that is to say, the shooting with the broad arrow, the leaping for men, the wrestling, the throwing of the sledge, the pitching of the bar." James I. in his "Book of Sports" encouraged Sunday games "after evening service," but "the meaner sort" were forbidden to engage in bowling. Stopped later by parliament, this was republished by order of Charles I. and finally suppressed by the long parliament.

SAILORS AND DRINK.

Odd Devices For Obtaining Intoxicants on Board Ship.

Sailors have more originality, more resourcefulness and more ingenuity in securing things to get drunk with than any other class of human beings. They are never at a loss to find some substitute for whisky and brandy when such conventional intoxicants are not to be had. The shellac carried upon men-of-war for varnishing purposes is such a common beverage among thirsty jack-tars that it has to be kept under lock and key and used under guard. Jalap is put in the alcohol of liquid compasses to keep the thirsty from draining them. Cologne is quite a treat in a pinch, and the story is told of a surgeon on one of our old warships who, being a good deal of a naturalist, was at a loss to account for the decay of some snakes, lizards and other specimens he had preserved in jars of alcohol until investigation showed that water had been substituted for the liquid in the jars and the alcohol consumed by some stealthy sailors. I recall the case of a vessel where the ship's cook reported the steady depletion of his stock of yeast, and the master-at-arms as steadily reported cases of mysterious intoxication in the crew, the ship being far from land at the time. Again investigation was resorted to, resulting in the discovery that the jacksies had been pilfering the yeast, which they subjected to a treatment yielding them a satisfactory intoxicating liquor.—San Francisco Town Talk.

AN INDIAN LEGEND.

The Diegueno Myth Concerning the Creation of the Earth.

The Diegueno (mission Indian) has no surmise concerning the creation of the earth. To him it is a primeval fact. Earth and sky existed in the beginning of things, but not as now, illumined by sun, moon and stars, informed with purpose and active with life. In the beginning all was shapeless, dark, inert, a chaos full of untold potencies. The sky power, brooding mystery, rested upon the receptive earth. Out of chaos came a voice, a song, ending in a long drawn sigh, signifying accomplishment, rest at the end of achievement; again, voice, song and sigh, and with each act of the first cause, an effect. The earth mother, Sin-yo-hauch, the mysterious name, brought forth to the sky power a god, Tu-chai-pa, the best, the firstborn, and then Yo-ko-mat-is, the lesser, the brother. Then did Tu-chai-pa, with the assistance of his brother, create man to inhabit the earth, and the sun, moon and stars to give light, first of all appearing from its primal prostrate state the sky to be the arch of the heavens as we see it now above our heads.

The spirituality of this conception of creation, together with certain points of resemblance to the Hebrew story of Genesis, dignifies the Diegueno account and places it in a class by itself among Indian myths.—Southern Workmen.

THE THEATER USHER.

An Incident That Raised Him in the Old Patron's Estimation.

"I have never been able to appreciate the insolent theater usher in the past," said the confirmed patron of the playhouses. "It is different now. I happened to be in a theater the other evening when a puff of smoke, which half the audience saw, made it 'touch and go' for a few seconds whether or not the always dreaded fire panic would follow. Enter at this point our old friend the callous usher. Down the aisle from the rear he strode with a disgruntled look on his face.

"Aw, sit down!" he said to the chairs. "Aw, say, sit down! What's the use! There ain't any fire!"

"The bored flavor of the fellow's voice was the fear absorbent the audience needed. Had he yelled excitedly or moved his arms he might have precipitated a scramble. It was a hard faced usher's "Aw, say, sit down!" that worked the wonder. Hereafter I shan't say things out loud when the paste-board locator shows me into the wrong pair of seats and chases me and my wife out again five minutes later, for I've found at last that the theater usher has his uses."—New York Globe.

COINCIDENCES.

The Odd Ways In Which Things Come About In This World.

A story is being told of a man selling toys on a London pavement recognizing in a lady who bought from him his own daughter. Stranger meetings have been recorded. Late one night two men who had been dining with the late Duke of Edinburgh at Buckingham palace set out for their club and paused for a moment at a crossing in Pall Mall. It was very late, and rain was falling, but there at the crossing was a tiny boy plying his broom and asking alms. One of the two was a man who never could resist such an appeal. He stopped to question the child. How came he to be there at so late an hour, seemingly so friendless and destitute? The boy answered that he was, as he seemed, utterly destitute. He had walked to London from a town on the south coast.

"And have you really no friends or relations in the world?" asked his kindly interrogator. "Well, sir, it's the same as if I hadn't," replied the lad. "I have a brother, but I shall never see him again. I don't even know if he's alive. He's a sailor, and I haven't seen him for a long time." At this the second man, who had not as yet spoken, showed interest. "What's your brother's name, little man?" he now asked. "His name is —, sir, and he's a signalman in the Bellerophon, but he's been away so long he must have forgotten me." "Good heavens!" exclaimed his second questioner. "Why, that's the name of my own signalman, and a fine young fellow he is, too, and now I notice there is a strong likeness between him and the boy." The speaker was the commander of the Bellerophon. The boy had been granted toll rights over the crossing for only that one night; his first questioner was the only man in a million who would have stopped in the pouring rain to question a crossing sweeper; his companion was almost the only man in the world who could have attested the truth of the lad's story. It is only necessary to add that the two good hearted fellows took the boy in hand and saw to his being made into as good a sailor as his brother.—St. James Gazette.

The First Coal in England.

It was to supply the wants of smiths and lime burners that English coal began to be systematically dug about A. D. 1200. This mineral fuel suited the requirements of their crafts even better than wood. An unwanted and widespread demand for fuel for these purposes doubtless sprang up at this period in connection with the numerous feudal castles and ecclesiastical buildings which were being erected throughout the kingdom. Not only were smiths and lime burners the sole patrons of coal at this early stage, but for a long time subsequently they continued to be its principal consumers.—Contemporary Review.
