One of the heaviest rain and hail storms seen in these parts passed over on Tuesday afternoon. The rain fell in torrents and hail fell to cover the ground and was the largest ever seen. One half stone measured five and one half inches in circumference. Several bridges washed out and many fences were destroyed.

During the hard storm on Tuesday afternoon lightning struck the Dr. Burrows building on Main street. The bolt followed the chimney into the house and one fork followed the stovepipe into the kitchen, the other fork went into the parlor and following the paper along the top border of the wall paper and up through the ceiling and out through the roof. Dr. Burrows and son Lowell who were in the bedroom at the time escaped unhurt. The damage was slight.

Death made another call in our midst on Monday morning May 22 and left two homes to mourn and miss a dear one. The king of terror at times seems to begin at the wrong end of the register, to have inverted the laws of nature. Passing over the couch of decrepit age, and by the hopeful man and youth he has nipped infancy in its bud. Anna Gladys Irene the daughter of Mrs. P. A. Petersen in Kiron, after an illness of three weeks passed on to heavenly realms at the age of nine months and two days. During his short stay it had encircled itself in the fond and loving parents' hearts, who now with anguish had to bid their darling farewell. Besides her parents two sisters and other relatives and friends mourn her departure. The funeral services were held at the Lutheran church on Tuesday afternoon and the remains were placed by the side of the eight months old babe of Mr. and Mrs. Alf Samuelson near Odebolt who died the same day and the funeral service conducted at the same time by Rev. J. A. Benander. Thus these peaceful infants who breathed out their tender souls almost in the instant of receiving it, lie still and quiet. Staying only a few months they bid a speedy adieu to time and terrestrial things. What could these little hasty sojourners find so forbidding in this world to occasion their early departure? Happy voyager, no sooner launched, than arrived at the haven safe for time and eternity. No storms of a troublesome and dangerous world to meet, never to feel the slightest of evil which oppresses surviving humanity, no arrows of calamity barbed with anguish for them to meet. Safe from all. What comfort to the mourning parents to know that the little ones are crowned with victory before the sword is drawn or the conflict begun. Perhaps the supreme Disposer of events foresaw some inevitable snare of temptation forming or some dreadful storm of adversity impending. And can the mourners be dissatisfied with that kind precaution which has housed their plant, who has moved into shelter their flowers before the thunder roared, before the lightning blew, before the tempest raged? They are not lost but taken away from evil to come.

A terrible hail storm, accompanied by a hard rain and lightning, struck this section Tuesday afternoon. Many hail stones picked up on the streets were as large as eggs. Lightning also struck the Geo. Hooten residence on the roof between the two chimneys and tore off a big patch of shingles. It then followed the rafters till it struck the telephone wires, burning out about twelve feet of the wire. Much damage was also done to the plastering in one of the rooms. Luckily it did not set fire to the building as it would have been hard to extinguish in the roof and between the walls. No doubt, much damage was done by the hail to fruit buds, garden truck and what corn was up. The storm started at about 2:30 and it hailed for at least an hour.

The "Cosmopolitan" announces a series of articles on the great industries of the United States. This is a subject that must naturally arouse the widest interest. The June issue contains the first—"Glass-Making," by William R. Stewart. The illustrations, which are numerous, give an excellent idea of the various stages of glass manufacture. If the rest of the series is as good as the first article, it will have a decided educational value.
