Weak Hearts

Are due to indigestion. Ninety-nine of every one hundred people who have heart trouble can remember when it was simple indigestion. It is a scientific fact that all cases of heart disease, not organic, are not only traceable to, but are the direct result of indigestion. All food taken into the stomach which fails of perfect digestion ferments and swells the stomach, puffing it up against the heart. This interferes with the action of the heart, and in the course of time that delicate but vital organ becomes diseased. Mr. D. Kauble, of Nevada, O., says: "I had stomach trouble and was in a bad state as I had heart trouble with it. I took Kodol Dyspepsia Cure for about four months and it cured me."

Kodol Digests What You Eat and relieves the stomach of all nervous strain and the heart of all pressure. Bottles only $1.00. Size holding 2 1/2 times the trial size, which sells for 50c. Prepared by E. O. DeWITT & CO., CHICAGO.

RIGHT SMART O' FUN

[Original.]

Sam Singleton was an honest, good natured country boy who became tired of being bossed by his father, an overbearing man. Besides, old Singleton was parsimonious and wouldn't even pay his son the wages he gave the hired help. Of course the old man was rich. Stingy people always grow rich. But what bothered Sam was that his father wanted him to marry Farmer Dudgeon's daughter because Dudgeon was as rich as himself. Molly Dudgeon was a very unattractive young woman, and Sam would have none of her.

So one fine morning in June Sam was missing on the farm, and a young man who might have been his twin brother, calling himself Bob Burton, applied for work to John Ketcham, whose unpretentious farm lay twenty miles distant. The harvesting was on and men were hard to get, therefore Bob Burton was engaged.

Now, it happened that Farmer Barton had a daughter Bessie, one of six children, who was as pretty as a ripe peach hanging in August sunlight, and Burton (or Sam Singleton) was as much smitten with her as he had been repelled by Molly Dudgeon. There was something winning about the young man, and Bessie was as much attracted to him as he was to her.

Bessie was a quiet little minx, one of the "still water runs deep" kind, and was so prudent as to her meetings with Sam that her father, especially since he was busy getting in the crops, knew nothing of what was going on till it was too late. Then he discharged the interloper and put his daughter under strict watch. He had nothing against Sam, mind you, except that he belonged to that uncertain class, extra farm hands, many of whom are a trifle shiftless. Ketcham would have been glad enough to marry his daughter to a man possessed of a few acres, some stock and utensils, but a roving farm hand—never.

Well, Bessie remained the same dutiful child, so dutiful and unresisting that one would suppose butter wouldn't melt in her mouth. But one morning in October, when a white hoar frost covered the ground, her mother, going to the spring house for some honey, cast her eye up the road and saw her dutiful daughter jump a fence, get into a buggy with the discharged farm hand and ride away.

"Pa," she called to her husband, who at the moment came out of the barn door, "Bessie's gone away with that mischievous Burton feller! I just seen her get into a wagon with him up yonder."

Without a word Farmer Ketcham turned back into the barn and began to harness up. The only light conveyance he had was out with his only reasonably good roadster. He put the next horse, a slow one, into a two seated heavy wagon and drove away in the direction the fugitives had taken.

Now, the county seat lay ten miles away, midway between the Ketcham and Singleton farms. Sam was bent on reaching it and a justice whom he hoped to find there, with a view to a speedy marriage. He didn't know their flight had been discovered and didn't move in a tearing hurry till he heard a familiar creak behind; then he laid on the stump of a whip, and the race began. Three-quarters of an hour later, after various vicissitudes and delays to both pursued and pursuer, the young couple dashed up to the courthouse, jumped from the buggy and ran up the steps.

As soon as the loungers saw the couple drive up in such haste they knew there was a runaway match. Elopers always have the sympathy of observers on their side, and in a twinkling every lounge became a swift footed messenger hunting for the justice who was not in his office. Sam and Bessie had scarcely reached the room where the good man worked when old Ketcham drove up and likewise dashed up the courthouse steps.

"Get in there!" exclaimed a lounge, pointing to the open door of a vault. The couple did so, and the door was closed, save a crack for air. In a few moments Ketcham poked his head in at the door and, seeing only one man looking out the window and another reading a newspaper, went on through the building in his search. Meanwhile the justice arrived, and the conditions were explained to him. Since the impressive marriage service was liable to interruption in the office, the justice went into the vault. There was no light there, and he was obliged to proceed from memory. When nearly through he heard a commotion in the office. Some one had told Ketcham what was going on in the vault. The two men in the office were barring the way, and the old man was fighting for an entrance.

"Feel for her hand!" exclaimed the justice. "Got it? All right. I pronounce you man and wife."

When the couple came out and Farmer Ketcham learned that his daughter had married the heir to the Singleton farm he asked Sam why he hadn't told him and saved all the fuss. "Wouldn't 'a' trusted father any more'n you," replied Sam. "Besides, there's right smart o' fun in a runaway."

Farmer Singleton was as rampant about the marriage as Farmer Ketcham was secretly delighted. Singleton repudiated his son and made a will leaving all he possessed to charity, but time softened him, and he tore the will up and, going to Ketcham, with whom the young couple were living, made an arrangement with him to reinstate his son provided Ketcham would give his daughter a dot. This Ketcham was unable to do, whereupon Singleton concluded to take the couple entirely under his especial protection.

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Colorado has a recently appointed woman justice of the peace, Mrs. Rosabel Italy of Colorado Springs.

The Duchess of Sutherland is an expert dressmaker and has won more than one prize for designing gowns.

Mrs. Almerie Paget is the latest American credited with the design to capture London society. She is negotiating for a house in Berkeley square.

Mrs. Daniel McCall of Cat Island lighthouse, on the Mississippi coast, turned the light for two nights by hand because the mechanism was out of order and her husband was lying dead.

Mrs. Julia A. Joy of Saco, Me., who has just celebrated her ninety-fourth birthday, is the oldest member of the Methodist church in Maine, having joined that denomination seventy-nine years ago. She goes to church in all kinds of weather.

Miss May Van Alen, the New York heiress, is a goddess to her milliner, for she never wears the same hat twice, this being one of the eccentricities for which she has become famous. Her head covering is always as large as fashion's law will allow.

The heaviest girl in the world of her age is Meda Milmoite of Kentucky, ten years old and weighing 270 pounds. She has gained eighty-four pounds in the last three years. She is exceedingly active physically and mentally as bright as any girl of her age.

Mrs. Grover Cleveland has become an expert in photography, and the fascinating occupation has become her chief diversion. In her beautiful home, Westland, Princeton, N. J., she has a complete equipment, and the finish of her pictures shows how painstaking she has been in studying the use of the camera.

Good Bread

How good good bread tastes—so good one could almost make a meal of it. You know the flavor—the wheaty flavor, sweet as a nut. Do you know the secret? It's in the yeast. Good yeast—good bread. Poor yeast—poor bread—and indigestion. The home-made bread of the American housewife leads the world. The secret of it is found in a purely vegetable yeast, made of the finest malt, hops, corn, and other healthful ingredients, in the cleanest and best-equipped yeast factory in existence. Yeast Foam is the only yeast that preserves in the bread all the delicious flavor and nutritive qualities of the wheat. Try it.

YEAST FOAM
