Crawford County State Bank,

The Best Security for Depositors DENISON, IOWA. Farm Loans at Five Per Cent Interest

This Bank is incorporated under the laws of the State of Iowa. This gives the best security to all depositors, not only to the amount of stock, but the personal property of each share holder is held to the amount of his share to any extent to the bank. Incorporated banks are under the control of the State Auditor, who can at any time examine the business, and according to his investigation the published statements are made. Depositors in an incorporated bank have more security than the confidence imposed in the office. They have the best security, because the capital stock can not be used at pleasure for outside speculation and investment. The Crawford County State Bank is the best incorporated banking institution in the county. A general banking business done. Passage Tickets Sold. Insurance Written. Loans Negotiated. L. AMONG THE EDITORS.

"They burned their corn for fuel in democratic days," recalls the Webster City Journal.

Nobody is working a gag about Roosevelt being like Buffalo Bill. He has more than a show—he has a cluck.—Spirit Lake Beacon.

Roosevelt's popularity is conducive to good morals in more ways than one. There is very little betting on election this year.—Marshalltown Times Republican.

"It is worth while to remember that the anti-trust law was framed by a republican, was passed by a republican house and senate, and was signed by a republican president," suggests the Keokuk Gate City. "Also that it became a law against the protests and votes of the democratic party in congress and out of it. That is where the two parties stand on that matter."

It is noted that every day men are turning up who voted for John Charles Fremont in 1856, but that not many are appearing with the claim that they voted for James Buchanan. Even Candidate Davis does not press the point, although he makes bold to record his indorsement of the economy of the Buchanan administration.—Sioux City Journal.

In an editorial about Parker headed, "Doesn't Know His Own Country," the Winnebago County Republican says, "Just think of a man standing before the American people as a candidate for the highest office in the land who has never seen Chicago, or St. Louis, Denver or Iowa's capitol city, or the boundless praries of the west, teeming with wealth and people."

In every national campaign for forty years past the Republican party has stood upon its record of things done, of laws enacted, of policies established under which the country has progressed and prospered. The record of the Democratic party made in two administrations was so full of disaster, of commercial ship wreck, of industrial paralysis and business failures that its chief business in recent years has been to get as far away from its record as possible.—The Boone Standard.

Let's see. It was in 1893 to 1896 that Bryan democrats insisted that Grover Cleveland had betrayed his party and sold out to Wall street because he insisted upon maintaining the gold standard. Now these same democrats are lauding Judge Parker, notwithstanding the Judge declares he is a gold standard man. This proves that Grover Cleveland was right then or his party and Bryan are wrong now. One thing to Mr. Cleveland's credit is the fact that he had the courage to stand by his country and let his party go to grass.—Webster City Freeman.

The Nevada Representative calls attention to the peculiar attitude of Bryan in this campaign and asserts that clearly he proposes to do two things, one of which is to maintain his party regularity and the other is to avoid doing anything to help Parker. The Representatives says: "Bryan has managed after a dozen or more years of most uninterrupted campaigning to develop suddenly a severe case of 'sore throat,' and though he permits appointments to be made for him, something always prevents his filling them."

The Rockwell City Advocate finds that "the game of politics is responsible for the attack upon Roosevelt on account of his pension order. Real issues being scarce it is necessary to manufacture them. In deference to the stand taken by some of the leading members of his party Judge Parker has joined in the assault on the order No. 78. His utterance is a bold one, but he could hardly have taken a position more unpopular in the nation generally, always excepting the solid south."

The Ringgold Record characterizes Parker's letter of acceptance as comparatively tame and dull. That paper calls it an artful piece of political fencing and further says, "He was robbed of his manhood and free agency and made the mere instrument of the expediency method adopted by his party. Hence he is not positive and direct and he could not be. He was not his own mouth piece, but that of others. He had to speak just so and so. The paper lacks positiveness and no wonder."

AROUND THE STATE

The Congregationalists of Anamosa recently dedicated a new $20,000 church.

Fred McArthur, a young man living in Marshalltown, lost his arm last week while breaking on the Iowa Central railway.

The Central Association of Congregational Churches and Ministers held its annual session at Reinbeck on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week.

The Daly disc narrow and barrel cart factory at Charles City burned last week, entailing a loss of $40,000. There was only a small amount of insurance.

Director J. R. Sage of the Iowa climate and crop service bureau says this year's crop of corn will be a "bumper" and one that the world may well go enthusiastic over.

S. H. Shepley, for the past five years superintendent of the west Des Moines schools, has resigned his position and accepted an offer from a life insurance company which carries with it a much larger salary than that of superintendent of the West Des Moines schools.

Ella Lutter, the fourteen-year-old stepdaughter of Tobias Meyer, living seven miles southwest of Marathon was fatally burned by the ignition of a bottle of turpentine. She was applying some turpentine to a cut in her foot and set the bottle by the stove. The turpentine ignited and covered the unfortunate victim with fire. She lived only a few hours, dying in great agony.

The body of Barney Leonard, an old soldier who had died at the Soldier's home at Marshalltown, was held by the express agent at Daveport until the bill of the Marshalltown undertaker and express charges, a total of $12.55 were paid. The body was shipped C. O. D. and it looked for a time as if there would be no funeral, but an old comrade paid the bill and he was given a soldier's burial.

Miss Sophia Dantemann, aged 18, a young lady living near Woden, Iowa, recently underwent an operation in which a tumor weighing forty pounds was removed from her stomach. The presence of the tumor was not noticed until about a year ago, from which time she has been reduced almost to skin and bones, the tumor taking away all the nourishment. The operation was quite successful and the patient has gained rapidly ever since.

A robber walked into the savings bank at Treynor, a small town fifteen miles east of Council Bluffs, and at the point of a revolver compelled the assistant cashier, Miss Francis Flood, to take $1,700 from the cash drawer and vault and put the money in his bag. Then the robber drove the young woman who was alone in the bank, into the big vault, and locked her in. Customers coming in a half hour later heard the young woman's screams and released her from the vault.

William J. McCrum, a Cherokee county farmer, 36 years of age, is the plaintiff in a suit before the United States district court at Sioux City in which he asks $15,000 damages from his father-in-law, Frederick Schmidt, of Los Angeles, Cal., for alienating his wife's affections. Mrs. McCrum's parents became angry because she deeded her husband an Iowa farm and some California property in 1892, and since that time they have kept her from him and have completely alienated her affections.

The canning factory closed for the season last Thursday night. The total pack was about 2,900,000 cans of corn. The company bought of Sac County farmers 8,193,628 pounds of corn, for which was paid the sum of $20,314.57. In addition to this outlay the factory has paid for wages since the opening of the canning season on August 25 about $10,000. The distribution of over thirty thousand dollars among the people of Sac City and the surrounding country has done not a little to make money more plentiful and the fact that it was paid in liberal remuneration for labor or products of the farm adds to the serviceableness.—Sac City Sun.

LAW REGULATING AUTOMOBILES

Many of our readers are perhaps unfamiliar with the Iowa State Law in regard to operating automobiles. For the benefit of those who have not read the law we print the following section taken from Chapter 53 of the 30th general assembly.

SECTION 9. Any person operating a motor vehicle shall at request or on signal by putting up the hand, from a person riding or driving a restive horse or other draft or domestic animal, bring such motor vehicle immediately to a stop, and, if travelling in the opposite direction, remain stationary so long as may be reasonable to allow such horse or animals to pass, and, if travelling in the same direction, use reasonable caution in passing such horse or animal, and the operator and occupants of any motor vehicle shall render necessary assistance to the party having in charge said horse or other draft animal in passing.

What Happened to A Country Girl

(Original.)
This is a plain, unembellished story of what might happen in a large city any day.

Winifred Bolles, an unsophisticated country girl, went to town in search of employment. Walking from store to store she at last found herself unwittingly in the private office of a benevolent looking old gentleman, Mr. Herman Knowles, who, though she did not know it, was the head of the firm.

"What is it, little girl?" he asked kindly.
Winifred asked for work and was sent to the proper person with Mr. Knowles' order that she be employed. She was directed to begin her labor the next morning.

As she was leaving the store a man stepped up to her and said: "Would you mind taking this to the telegraph office over there, my dear? Here's a quarter to pay for it."
"Certainly," said Winifred, and, without even asking why the man didn't take it himself, she started for the telegraph office. The message was inclosed in an envelope, and when she reached the window where messages were received and handed it in the clerk took it out of the envelope and with it a peculiar looking instrument made of steel wire.

"Hm!" he said, looking at the girl suspiciously. Then he read the message.

Ben—Don't come tonight. We are watching.
ROSE.

Again the clerk looked at the girl, scanned her features closely and said: "Sit down there while I count the words."

Winifred obeyed, but had not been seated five minutes when a policeman entered and went to the window, where the clerk handed him the message and the wire instrument. Then the policeman turned to Winifred and told her to come with him. She was taken to a police station and led up before an inspector, the policeman at the same time producing the articles he had received from the clerk, saying:

The girl tried to send the telegram, evidently warning a burglar. She'd unintentionally left the skeleton key in the envelope and handed both to the clerk at the telegraph office."

"Did you order the message sent and its receiver arrested?"

"Yes."
"All right. Take her away."

Poor little Winifred was led away to a cell without the slightest knowledge of where she was going.

She knew no one in the city, but the face of the kind looking gentleman who had employed her kept coming up to her, and she determined if possible to send word to him of her misfortune. Her message was delivered, and the firm's lawyer was instructed to attend to her case. He called to see Winifred, listened suspiciously to her story, then heard the statement of the inspector, forming the opinion that Winifred was in service and had a lover whom she had been intending to introduce into her employer's premises for the purpose of robbery. This opinion he reported to Mr. Knowles, with the remark, "All depends upon whether the telegram reaches its destination. Thus far the messenger has not been able to find the person to whom it was addressed."

"Nor will he?" said Mr. Knowles. "The man who gave her the message watched her and saw her arrest. He doubtless found a way to a warning."

"How do you account for her having a skeleton key?"
"I have no theory as to that. I judge of the girl only from what I saw of her for a few minutes, and I am never deceived as to an honest face."

"And you do not consider her application to you for work a mere blind?"
"Certainly not. Please assume that she is innocent and do the best you can for her." And the merchant turned to other matters.

The plan adopted by the police was to have Winifred held for trial and the trial put off in hopes of developments or an implication by the girl of her confederate. When Winifred was brought up for examination there was really nothing to be said in her favor. One thing and one alone gave her hope. Among the visitors in the courtroom she saw the kindly face of Mr. Knowles. There was something in those benevolent features that sent a thrill of relief through her poor little heart.

The judge heard the statement of the prosecution and would have listened to the evidence of the defense if there had been any. Since there was not, Winifred's attorney contented himself with forming improbable theories as to how Winifred came into possession of the incriminating articles. The judge remanded the prisoner for trial, fixing her bail at $1,000.

"I will furnish that bail," said Mr. Knowles, rising, and the paper being signed, Winifred was discharged. Her benefactor told her to go to work at his store the next morning.

Before the trial came off, by Mr. Knowles' orders, Winifred's history from the time of her birth was collected, testimonials as to her character were obtained from her home in the country and were produced by able counsel. Winifred was acquitted and became one of the most important of the employees of Knowles & Co. But neither the man who gave her the telegram nor the one to whom it was addressed was ever found.

Thus was an innocent girl saved from months in prison and a probable conviction involving years more of the same dreadful life by the confidence and kindness of one man who knew honesty intuitively.
