

A Piano Talk

We would like to have a heart to heart talk with the people about Pianos. There is no question about the enjoyment and refinement a good Piano brings to the home. The investment is considerable however and unfortunately few people are expert judges of these instruments. This makes the piano market an attractive field for the fakir. He goes from house to house displaying a piano that cost him from $100 to $125, and offers it as a bargain at $350 or $450. At such a price he is of course able to offer you $100 for an old organ in exchange or to underbid any reliable make offered by a reliable dealer. His guarantee is not worth the paper on which it is written and too often the purchaser finds that he has nothing but a Tin Pan in a Mahogany Case.

Not as a matter of sentiment; not to encourage the Home Merchant—but strictly as a Matter of Business and Good Common Sense we would urge you to buy only well known and reliable makes, sold by a dealer whose guarantee is good and upon whose word you can rely.
