The teachers had a gay time Friday night with Miss Stoner and Schneider at the home of Mrs. J. G. Wygant. "Musical Stunts" formed the entertainment and a great deal of latent talent was exhibited. Did you know that Denison has in proportion to its size contributed a large amount for the Frisco sufferers? The schools of Denison contributed $50.00 and nearly $700. was contributed by the church and individuals. Carroll publishes a list of some $200 which was all that city could raise. Mason City nearly twice the size of Denison gave $1,000., while Des Moines, which is the stingiest city in Iowa gave about $8,000.

The feeding of the California sufferers by the good people of Denison turned out to be a great farce. Someone seems to have lost his head and meals were prepared at every town along the Northwestern. A large amount of good cooking went to waste in Denison waiting for the refugees who never came and more than one poor man, like the editor has had to eat his way through quantities of minced ham and cold tongue that was prepared for the "quakers". Denison is big hearted and would have been glad to have helped the hungry, but it was disappointing to get everything ready and then to have no guests.

J. E. Balle returned from California on Sunday night. After learning that his sister and Miss Brodersen were uninjured by the earthquake he was able to enjoy his trip. He tells us that Stanford University will resume in August although many of the fine buildings must be entirely rebuilt. He saw the ruins of San Francisco but did not enter the city. He said one might enter the city providing he would stand in line and give good reason for wishing to go across the ferry. But once in Frisco one was apt to be set to work, willy nilly, and then to be placed in quarantine upon trying to leave. Julius thought a little old Pullman was good enough for him, and took in the grand canon instead of San Francisco. He tells us that Palo Alto and San Jose seem to have been the center of disturbance and that both of these cities suffered more from the earthquake itself in proportion to their size than did San Francisco.
