FACE FULL OF SHOT

Boys Get The Worst of a Melon Raid

SEVENTY-FIVE BIRD SHOT.

Extracted from One Youth as Result of Expedition to Orr's Melon Patch.

Denison has had no little excitement this week, and a vast amount of discussion, arising from a Sunday night raid on the melon patch on the Orr truck farm north of town. About one o'clock in the morning a party of about seven Denison boys were found in the melon patch and were just starting to get busy. Mr. Orr and other watchers, who had been lying in wait for raiders as much damage had been done the week before, opened a brisk fire with shot guns loaded with number 8 bird shot. As a result one boy is lying in the hospital, seventy-five shot have already been extracted from his face and breast and they are more to follow. One boy received a shot in the finger and still another youth does not care to sit down at present. There is talk that the matter will be taken up before the grand jury and that serious litigation may follow.

Public sentiment is about equally divided as to whether Mr. Orr did right or wrong and many are the disputes that have arisen since the shooting.

Orr's Side of the Case

Mr. Orr is engaged in the business of truck farming. He has twenty-five acres from which he makes a living for himself and family. He is a hard working man, honest honorable and upright. He is a law-abiding citizen, and has raised his family in the fear of God. He works hard every year with his gardening and from the fruits of his work depends his livelihood. He raises melons net as a luxury, but as a part of his business. They are as much a part of his stock in trade as dry goods or clothing are the stock in trade of the merchants. He claims the same right to protect his property that the merchant would exercise in protecting his store from a gang of thieves or burglars.

Mr. Orr states that his melon patch was twice raided last week by organized gangs. On the first of these raids more than thirty melons were taken, other melons were plugged and left to rot, and the vines were trampled and crushed. He estimates his loss at perhaps $25.00 from this raid. He determined to watch for raiders and did so up till midnight, but after he had gone to bed the boys paid a visit to his melons and again stole them, destroyed vines and did much damage. This second raid determined Mr. Orr to prepare to defend his crop.

Four men were in the melon patch, they were armed with shot guns, loaded with No. 8 bird shot. About one o'clock Monday morning at least seven boys entered the field and the watchers opened fire. They claim that they shot low hoping to pepper the boys' legs, and thus to give them such a lesson as would keep them out of the patch in future. Mr. Orr claims that the boy so badly shot, must have been kneeling or stooping down to get a melon and in this way got the full benefit of the charge in the face and breast.

Mr. Orr claims that he made no statement that he wished he had killed the boys, but says that he felt that he had the right to protect his property, and had no intent to seriously injure anyone. He says that the boys were obliged to go nearly two miles to reach the patch in the way they did, that it was no chance lark, but an organized raid that meant to do a serious damage to his property. He feels that after planting and caring for his vines he should have the right to harvest his crop without sitting up night after night to protect it.

The Boys View Of It

The boys' friends claim that melons are melons and as such are contraband of war to boys the world over. That Mr. Orr had the right to protect his property, that he might have called upon the authorities to protect him, that he might have captured the boys and had them arrested, that he might even have shot in the air and scared them away, but that he had no right to take the law in his own hands, and for the protection of a few dollars worth of property, take measures which might mean maiming for life or killing.

There is much feeling on both sides and the matter is apt to be aired in the courts before it is ended. The Review has an opinion in the case, but as it may come at once before the courts, we do not deem it good public policy to express it.

IN NEW COURT HOUSE

Judge Powers Presides Over First Term in New Room.

DOCKET IS A LIGHT ONE

Divorces and Naturalizations Occupy First Days. Jury Called for Next Week.

To Judge F. M. Powers fell the honor of holding the first term of court in Crawford county's new court house. As he sits back in his easy chair with the handsome carved work behind him, the Judge looks as if he wishes Crawford was the only county in his district. He even donned a white vest in honor of the occasion. He said that a man ought to be proud to be sentenced to the penitentiary from such a court room and that hereafter he would give six months longer on account thereof.

The new jury box will be used for the first time next week. Below is the record of business transacted by the court this week.
