"I want to congratulate you over your recent editorial about Denison. Some people held up their hands in holy horror over it, but I know that conditions are just as you painted them if not worse. If some of the parents knew what their children were doing nights, there would be an awakening in this town." This is the comment made by Prof. W. C. Van Ness, who from the very nature of his profession comes into close contact with the youth of the city. The Review does not think Denison is a bad town, far from it, but it believes that it is room for improvement and that it will not do to be too vain about our city and its moral atmosphere.
