"We never repent of eating too little," was one of the ten rules of life of Thomas Jefferson, president of the United States, and the rule applies to every one without exception during this hot weather, because it is hard for food, even in small quantities, to be digested when the blood is at a high temperature. At this season we should eat sparingly and properly. We should also help the stomach as much as possible by the use of a little Kodol For Indigestion and Dyspepsia, which will rest the stomach by digesting the food itself. Sold by Lamborn Drug Co.

Short Stories About People.

ERMAN J. RIDGWAY.

THE publisher of Everybody's Magazine, Erman J. Ridgway, who has recently taken to the lecture platform, is an illustration of a man who is developed in an all around way. As a magazine editor and publisher he has won conspicuous success, but his devotion to the literary life has not warped him or stunted his growth as a citizen, a man of affairs and as a specimen of physical manhood. He belongs to half a dozen clubs and is active and popular in them, takes a keen interest in progressive movements both as a magazine publisher and as an individual citizen, keeps up the acquaintanceships of his college days, and in spite of the many demands of his business finds time for outdoor sports and exercise, especially for golf, and is often seen on the links of two golf clubs in Montclair, N. J., where he makes his home. He is one of the leading spirits in the Commonwealth club, a unique organization for men and boys, which is a power for good in Upper Montclair. Mr. Ridgway was born in Muskingum county, O., and studied at Northwestern university for two years, afterward going to Yale, where he took the degree of bachelor of arts with honors. He was for some years associated with Frank A. Munsey in magazine and newspaper work and became publisher of Everybody's Magazine about four years ago. In a recent address at Chautauqua, N. Y., Mr. Ridgway spoke in praise of the much abused "yellow journal." He said in part: "The yellow journalist, when he literally yells the 5,000,000 poor families of this country out of their mental apathy and compels them to take an interest in life and affairs, is a public benefactor. God speed the mission of the yellow press!"

In his last years General William Booth of the Salvation Army is receiving honors from most unexpected quarters. Who would have dreamed twenty-five years ago that he would receive from such a conservative institution as Oxford university an honorary degree? Yet at the same time that Oxford complimented the great American humorist and man of letters, Mark Twain, by the bestowal of a degree it also honored the venerable Salvationist, making him a doctor of civil law. With his long white beard and bristling hair he makes an impressive figure in his academic robes. Since his formation of his Hallelujah band in the early sixties he has labored zealously to Christianize the multitude, to purify the public mind and to improve the material welfare of the poor. The militant idea struck him forcibly just thirty years ago, when his Hallelujah band, then spread all over the British Isles, became the Salvation Army and he its general.

In his seventy-eighth year he is more widely known and revered than any other figure in the religious world except the pope of Rome. There are many others conducting evangelical and spiritually uplifting work in smaller fields, but there is none his equal in the public vision.

Since he received his honorary degree at the University of Oxford General Booth has been making a tour of Great Britain in a motor car. In every humble hamlet there is a branch of the Salvation Army. He has been received everywhere with veneration by great throngs. No emperor ever called forth a greater manifestation of his power over the people. He has lately appointed his own successor, a privilege denied to the crowned kings.

William W. Finley, president of the Southern railway, has come into unusual prominence on account of the controversy between his railroad and the state of North Carolina which has occasioned a conflict between the state and federal courts and rejuvenated the doctrine of state rights as a political issue. Mr. Finley succeeded to the presidency of the road when its former president, Samuel Spencer, was killed in a wreck last Thanksgiving day. Mr. Finley was born at Pass Christian, Miss., in 1833 and started his railway career as a stenographer to one of the vice presidents of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern and rose in ten years to be assistant general freight agent of the road. Ten years later found him general traffic manager of the Great Northern. In 1895 he was made third vice president of the Southern and was second vice president of the same road when the death of Mr. Spencer occurred and he was chosen as its head. Mr. Finley was intimately associated with James J. Hill while traffic manager of the Great Northern and later second vice president and was looked upon by Mr. Hill as one of the coming railway men of the country.

In the contest over the North Carolina railway rate law Mr. Finley was arrested and was being taken before a police judge when released on a writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge Pritchard of the federal court.

Boys and girls the world over will be interested in a relic that recently came into the possession of an American woman, Mrs. Huldah B. White of Philadelphia. It is the old time firelock used on the island of Juan Fernandez by Alexander Selkirk, whose experiences formed the basis for Daniel Defoe's story entitled "Robinson Crusoe." The firelock has an authentic pedigree and was for a long time in the possession of Selkirk's relatives near his birthplace, Largo, Fife-shire. It was purchased by Mrs. White at a sale in Robinson Crusoe's Edinburgh for $100.

Vice President Fairbanks likes young people. With five children in the family, four sons and a daughter, the Fairbanks household has always been a lively one, and it has long been known for its open hearted and old fashioned hospitality. Mrs. Fairbanks is prominent in patriotic movements, and her husband encourages her in her special work in woman's sphere.

The strike among the miners in the iron regions of Minnesota threatened to put Governor John A. Johnson in a difficult situation by requiring him to decide whether or not to call out the state troops to enforce order in the districts affected by the strike. For a presidential candidate this is a risky thing to do on account of the liability of his motives being misconstrued by opponents. Fortunately perhaps for GOVERNOR JOHN A. JOHNSON.

Governor Johnson's presidential chances, the occasion for calling out the troops did not arise. He is the man favored for the Democratic presidential nomination by Colonel Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal. It is three years since he became a national figure. It was in the fall of 1904 that he was first a candidate for governor, and some of his opponents thought to beat him by recalling the fact that his mother took in washing. The circumstance that he did not allow her to do it after he was fourteen years old, but took upon his young shoulders the burden of supporting a family of five, rallied so many voters to his side that he was elected by a large majority, even though in the national election the state gave Mr. Roosevelt a big majority. Governor Johnson was chosen for a second term last autumn. He has won high praise for the manner in which he has conducted his office and handled questions arising out of the necessity of regulating the large corporations.

Governor Johnson is not an orator, but is a fluent speaker. In an address at Duluth some time ago he said:

"Ten thousand a year is enough for any man," and he betrayed what may be, after all, his real ambition. "As a life work," he went on, "I would rather be able to provide for the needs of a family, enjoy the fellowship of good books and good friends and write one book that would be read 100 years from now than to be able to amass all the money in the world."

The wife of the governor is a gracious and handsome woman, barely thirty years of age and tall, brown haired and with the ruddy glow of health in her cheeks. She is a native of Wisconsin and met the governor while on a visit to St. Peter, his home town. They were married four years ago.

The Assessor Foiled. Canning Assessor (to Kreesus' wife) -Wonder if I could get an idea from you as to how much your husband is worth?

Truthful Wife-I don't know. From the way he stints me I should say that instead of being assessed for anything at all the city ought to pay him something.—Boston Transcript.

Examples. "The country air develops an enormous appetite, doesn't it?" commented one summer boarder. "Yes," answered the other, "judging by the mosquitoes."—Washington Star.
