Jan. 5, 1908 The Word Made Flesh. John 1: 1-14.

The lessons for the coming six months will be in the New Testament. Personally it would suit us if the lessons remained in that most precious part of the bible for two years at least.

The beginning verses of the first chapter of John, have furnished texts for sermon and lectures lasting many months from most eminent divines, and so in the ordinary Sunday school class the wonderful things told about, can be but superficially talked of.

There is a tendency to think that Jesus was a new creation, or being, who came into existence with His birth as celebrated at the Christmas time. But John states, and Jesus, bears the same witness of himself, that He existed in power for ages before taking on the form of a man, and coming to earth as recorded in the gospels.

Jesus came to give light and life to the world. All history since His coming, bears out the claim that He has given a life and light, which has performed wonders in transforming power.

The lesson of to-day thus brings us face to face with the divinity of Jesus Christ. He cannot be considered as a good moral man who set us an example and then died a natural death.
