

THRILLING FLIGHT IN AIR SHIP

WRIGHT BROTHERS OF AMERICA NAVIGATE THROUGH THE AIR EIGHTY MILES AN HOUR SPEED.

The Remarkable Scene Depicted When the Great Test Was Made Near Washington City

Washington, D. C., July 30.—Orville Wright this evening attained the south of hard earned success. In a ten-mile cross country flight in the famous aeroplane built by himself and his elder brother, Wilbur and, accompanied by Lieut. Benjamin D. Foulois, an intrepid officer of the army signal corps, he not only surpassed the speed requirements of his contract with the government, but accomplished the most difficult and daring flight ever planned for a heavier-than-air flying machine. Incidentally he broke all speed records over a measured course and established beyond dispute the practicability of the aeroplane in time of peace and in time of war.

Wright's speed was more than forty-two miles an hour. He made the ten-mile flight in fourteen minutes and forty-two seconds, including the more than twenty seconds required for the turn beyond the line at Shuter hill, the southern end of the course. He attained a height in crossing the valley four-mile run of nearly 600 feet, and the average altitude of his practically level course was about 200 feet.

Taft Arrives Late

President Taft, who has become an enthusiastic spectator of the aeroplane trials although two years ago, when secretary of war, he is said to have expressed to army officers his profound skepticism as to the accomplishment of such a feat as that of which today he witnessed the completion, arrived upon the parade ground at Fort Meyer just in time to see the aeroplane land and to participate in the wild demonstration which welcomed the triumphant aviators. He sent Col. Treat, commanding officer of the artillery at Fort Meyer, to bear his congratulations to the victors.

A terrific wind and rain storm early in the afternoon seemed providentially provided to clear and quiet the atmospheric conditions in preparation for the flight, which was delayed only by the failure of the army field telegraph line to Shuter hill, depended upon for communication between the two ends of the course. It was still out of commission when Orville Wright, seizing the moment of the best weather conditions he had yet had for the speed test, had the machine placed on the starting rail and gave the motor a final test.

Crowd Pressed Eagerly

The engine worked perfectly and the crowd seemed to realize that an epoch making moment was at hand. They pressed forward against the lines which held them back, breathless, and eagerly watched every movement of the aviator and his machine. The signal corps men hoisted the great weight in the starting derrick which gives the machine its initial impulse. Miss Katherine Wright, the aviator's devoted sister, excited and anxious, was one of a group crowded so close to the machine as the crucial moment drew near that Wilbur was compelled to ask them to step back.

Lieut. Foulois, in his khaki uniform climbed into the passengers' seat beside the motor. Wilbur Wright and Charley Taylor, the Wrights' machinist, too their places at the propellers. Orville turned on the spark of the motor as they whirled the blades around. The motor picked up the impetus and Orville turned on full speed. For the first time the propellers of the aeroplane were whirling at their maximum capacity.

Rose Higher and Higher

The smooth and even song of the engine aroused the crowd to excited cheering. Wilbur took his place at the right tip of the planes and Orville clambered into his seat beside Foulois. He gripped the levers, and nodding to his brother slipped the cable which released the starting weight. The aeroplane shot down the track, rose before it reached the end and skimmed over the surface of the ground for 100 feet or more. As it drawn up by an invisible power the white winged man-bird rose higher and higher, reached the end of the field, turned at a slight angle and came about, facing the madly cheering multitude.

Hats and handkerchiefs were waving, automobile horns were tooting, some over-wrought spectators even wept as the great white creature turned again southward at the starting tower, and everybody in the crowd seemed intent upon giving her their daring passengers a "good-bye" on their perilous trip.

Crowd Shouts "There are O's"

Coming up as it were, on the air, rising higher and higher, Orville saw the machine at great speed

IN GOLD For the Best Ears of Corn

We want the best ears of corn that can be grown—not merely the greatest in size—not simply the most bready—but the combination of size, maturity and quality—everything that goes to make a perfect ear. To obtain this we offer one thousand dollars ($1,000) in gold to the persons who send those to Prof. B. W. Crossley, Iowa State Agricultural College, Ames, Iowa, on or before January 6th, 1910.

This contest is open to everybody.

No Entry Fee—No Money—Nothing to Buy or Sell—no work, simply a little watchfulness, possibly some care in an endeavor to produce these perfect specimens.

Millions of bushels of corn have been used during the past few years in the manufacture of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes. The most delicious of all breakfast foods is made entirely of the Sweetheart of the Best Corn. To further encourage the production of this great American grain—to keep the farmers of the country interested in its development—we make this most liberal offer with absolutely no strings to it.

Prof. P. G. Holden, who has devoted the best years of his life to the improvement of corn, will with his associates be actively in charge of this great contest. Prof. Holden will judge the corn and award the $1000 in Gold, which is now in his possession.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes is by far the most delicious form in which corn has ever been prepared. If you have never tried it, ask your grocer for a package today. There's a surprise in store for you.

If it doesn't keep it, send us two-cent stamps to cover mailing expenses and we will send you a liberal test package.

once again fully around the field. Then with a short turn he swept about almost over the heads of the closely banked spectators and started straight northward over the center of the drill field. "They're off" a thousand voices shouted as one.

Like a giant bird, circling the sky until it marks its prey and then, darting straight for its objective, this man bird swept unwaveringly down its course. The revolving propellers encouraged an illusion of swift winged bird flight.

Unwavering, it kept its course straight to the south, and it seemed to be rising ever higher as it passed over the diverse and heavily wooded country in the distance. Smaller and smaller it grew until it became a mere speck against the pearl sky above the horizon.

Wilbur's Concern Evident

Those who had glasses saw the aeroplane turn, first to the left and then to the right, about Shuter hill. Suddenly the speck was lost to view and as the seconds passed a silence grew upon the crowd, a silence that spoke of deep concern. Wilbur Wright, standing with leveled glasses beside his sister, strained his gaze in an effort to catch sight of the aeroplane when it should again rise above the skyline. The seconds seemed minutes and as the interval became seemingly alarming great beads of perspiration stood upon his brow and his agitation was evident. Suddenly the speck came in sight again, over the distant hill. A cry swept over the watching crowd.

Hoves in Sight Again

"There it is," everybody said, and the sigh of relief was plainly audible. Onward the machine came, growing with the seconds and seemingly swayed from its course by a westerly breeze. It grew and grew until almost every detail of it was visible. Soon the aerial navigators were home again over the drill ground, flying very low. Orville steered straight across the field and at a height of about twenty feet, swung around again to the southward and landed easily far down the field. The task was done and in triumph.

It is needless to describe the deafening cheers which welcomed the return. Despite the notice that nobody would be allowed on the field, there was a rush of the crowd which almost included the cordon of mounted men on guard. Galloping horses brushed the people back however, and the lines were reformed.

Katherine in a Frenzy

Katherine Wright, who had shouted as loud as anybody, ran down the field with her friend and grasped her brother almost hysterically, dancing with glee.

Wilbur was more self controlled and began calculating the speed of the trip, which, after consulting with Lieut. Foulois, he figured it at 42 1/2 miles.

"We were making eighty miles an hour coming back," were almost the first words of Foulois as he left his seat. Asked how it felt to fly, he replied: "It's good enough for me."

Orville said: "It's easier to fly across country than around a field."

He seemed more impressed by the lessons that the unusual flight had taught him than by any sense of his achievement.

"We were forced off our course by several counter currents," he added, "and in turning at the lower end a down trend of air took me lower than I meant to go. I was forced to climb higher on starting back."

Albert Harkness Dead

Mrs Chas. P. Hammond of this city received a telegram yesterday that her only brother, Albert W. Harkness, had died at his home on a fine farm near Clouderoft, N. M. No particulars of his death were sent, though it was known by relatives here that he was afflicted with stomach trouble. He was aged about 50 years.

The deceased had been a resident of New Mexico many years, at one time residing with his father, the late Judge D. D. Harkness, and family, at Cerrillos, this territory. He is survived by a wife, four sons and three daughters.

Albert Harkness was a kind, loving husband and an indulgent and devoted father. He was loyal to his friends, charitable to those who needed help, ready always to make proper allowances for the weaknesses of mankind and honorable in his department and business dealings.—Las Vegas (N. M.) Optic.
