A GRANDSON OF DENISON

Arthur Hooker of Spokane, Grandson of Denison's Founder, Highly Honored

Mr. A. E. Matthews of Spokane, Wash., has been thoughtful enough to send us a copy of the Daily Chronicle of August 13th containing the announcement that Arthur Hooker, one of Spokane's most promising and prominent young business men has been honored with election as Secretary of the National Irrigation Congress. Mr. Hooker is a son of Mary Denison, who was a daughter of Mr. J. W. Denison, the founder of this city. She will be well remembered by all the early settlers of Denison and many will be glad to learn that her son is one of the honored citizens of the great Northwest. The family has ever been one of pioneers and it is not surprising to learn that a grandson of Mr. Denison is a leader in the great new state.

Dunlap Reporter: A rather aggravated affair took place Saturday night in the eastern edge of Harrison county, near the M. J. Sullivan place. It seems that an altercation took place between N. B. Norris and Geo. J. Hansen, both of whom reside in Galland's Grove. The particulars are unknown, but when the affray had ended it took the services of a surgeon to sew up several gashes in the lower limbs of Hansen, said to have been inflicted by Norris with a knife. Charges were first filed against Norris for assault with intent to commit murder, but the penalty for this was so severe that the charges were changed to plain assault. Norris was placed under $2,000 bonds, which were furnished.

DR. STOCKDALE wants every person who suffers from a chronic disease—it makes no difference how bad their case is or how long they have suffered, or who has treated them and pronounced them incurable. He will make a thorough examination of their case, tell exactly what can be done for them, whether they are curable or not, how long it will require and all about it. He treats only chronic diseases. He has devoted twenty years of his life to the treatment of such diseases as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Stomach Troubles, Liver Disease, Constipation, Rheumatism, Bladder Troubles, Diseases of the Kidneys, Bright's Disease, Chronic Catarrh in all its forms, Heart and Nerve Troubles—in fact, every variety of chronic disease.

He is able to cure many chronic cases that have resisted other treatments—that are considered incurable. He wants it distinctly understood that he does not undertake any case that he thinks is incurable, and will tell the patient candidly when he has made the examination.

PROVING HIS GUILT.

By KINGSBURY WELCH. (Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.)

I am a postoffice inspector and have had a good deal to do with ferreting out crime in the extraction of money from letters. I work on certain principles that I have evolved by long experience, and it is usually a very easy matter for me to hunt down a culprit. This is because when a man begins to steal he continues his thefts. They are not committed by various people. All one has to do is to find that one person. Besides, there are various traps we set for him which he is not likely to suspect.

I once had a case where I got some information in advance which seemed to facilitate any investigations I might make. John Crawlins, a merchant, complained to me that his letters were being robbed in passing through the postoffice. I asked him if any one in his employ had access to his mail, and he told me that it was received and taken to the postoffice by a clerk named Robert Byrnes. Byrnes was taking the money if any one in his employ was taking it, and he interposed no objection to my investigating in that direction. He had suspected Byrnes and had watched him.

I made the young man's acquaintance, or, rather, the acquaintance of the family of which he was a part. He was the idol of his mother, a widow; two younger sisters and a sweetheart, Marion Swift. I saw that something was troubling the mother and set about winning her confidence, suspecting the cause of her worry to be her son. He was a gay, free handed young fellow, and whatever was on his mind was sure to come to the surface. His mother finally told me that her boy's generous nature was likely to prove his ruin. He made both her, his sisters and Marion Swift presents that she was sure he could not afford. She had heard of the extraction of money from his employer's mail and was in great distress for fear her son was the culprit.

This was a pretty direct clue. Nevertheless there was one thing that prevented me from following it with proper persistence—sympathy. Mrs. Byrnes was a lovely woman, Marion Swift was an attractive and innocent girl, while Robert was a boy whom every one loved. To confess the whole matter, I hadn't known Mrs. Byrnes an hour before I had made up my mind that she was the woman I was looking for for a wife.

I never occupied so much time in solving a detective problem—not that I couldn't solve it, but because I didn't wish it solved. It looked to me like one of those cases where a young man's heart runs away with his honesty, and I have known a number of them. If I fixed the crime upon him I would wound myself through not only his mother, but his betrothed and his sisters, aged respectively fifteen and twelve, all of whom I had come to love.

However, I have always believed that it is weakness to tamper with human frailties, and to shield young Byrnes would be to my own dishonor. I knew a way to prove his guilt, and I determined to use it.

Nine times in ten in placing a sheet of folded paper in an envelope one will put in the folded edge first because the letter will go in that way easier. I asked the merchant to write a letter to one of his correspondents to whom he was used to send money. He did so. I put it in the envelope with the folded edge down and, sealing it, told him to send it to the postoffice at a certain hour by Robert Byrnes. He promised to do so, and I left him.

The longest interval I have ever known in my life was that between writing and receiving that letter. I was in a private office at the postoffice when one of the clerks handed it to me. I held it in my hand fully ten minutes before I had the courage to open it. If the envelope had been opened there were nine chances in ten that the letter would be found reversed. Finally I tore off the cover.

It was as I had placed it. Though I was much relieved, I was not convinced and determined to make the experiment again and again till I was sure. But my suspicion, induced by the boy's mother's information, was disturbed, and I concluded to look elsewhere. After investigation I discovered that whenever Robert desired to leave the office earlier than usual he would confide the mail to another clerk named Hethrington. Hethrington had occupied his position for many years and had his employer's perfect confidence. I asked the merchant to send me a letter by Hethrington similar to the one he had already sent me and placed in the envelope the same way. He at first refused to do so, saying he knew all about Hethrington and intimated that he would find another man to do the work who could do it better. But he finally consented, and the letter was sent.

I confess I had no faith in making a discovery. Judge, then, of my surprise—and delight, I admit—when I drew the letter from the envelope in a reversed position.

I lost no time in confessing to the widow that my duty as postoffice inspector had forced me to apply tests that had resulted in establishing her son's innocence. The matter was kept a secret between us, and neither Robert nor any one else ever knew that I had stood ready to expose him if he were found guilty. I have since attributed to that secret my success in winning my position in the family of which I form, I flatter myself, no inconsiderable part. And I feel as confident that they all love me as that I love them all.

Dad's Homecoming.
Pa at last the hallway wins
In the dark,
And instant both his shine
He doth bark.
For the hattrack now, you see,
Isn't where it used to be.
Pa his way doth slowly make,
Has to grope;
Steps upon some mushy cake—
Drat the soap!
Then we hear a heavy fall,
Followed by a plaintive call.
Ma a cleaning day has had—
Bless her heart!
But she failed to furnish dad
With a chart.
Fetch a light from overhead.
Let us pilot dad to bed.

The Why.
There is a belief that if you hang a bright, pretty picture in your room and look at it earnestly every night and morning, your face will grow to resemble the one in the frame. This probably accounts for the fact that in almost every girl's room there is a picture of a Madonna.—Atchison Globe.
