WORTHY OF HIS HIRE

The Review holds no brief for Rev. Henry Ostrom, indeed it has since come to our notice that the Review was discriminated against, rather than for, by the management of the recent meetings, although with this the evangelist had nothing to do. Be this all as it may, however, we have never had any sympathy with the sneering remarks made about such workers, especially in regard to the compensation they receive.

Mr. Bryan receives from $200 to $500 for every speech, but the followers of Bryan are greatly incensed if anyone criticizes him therefor. Mr. LaFollette is no doubt deeply in earnest, but he demands $200 before he will go before an audience to tell what he knows about Congress. It is all right. They are worth the price. They get it. If they were not worth the price they would not get it.

Those who have had anything to do with our lecture course will tell you that they must spend eight or nine hundred dollars to secure half a dozen suitable attractions.

Rev. Henry Ostrom was here for about three weeks. He spoke twice and sometimes three times a day. All the rest of his time except barely enough for eating and sleeping, was open to any and to all who wished to talk with him concerning the revival work. With him were Mr. and Mrs. Hillis, a pianist and a cornetist. The three men worked throughout the campaign, the two ladies were here for a shorter time.

The expense was as follows: A first guarantee fund of about $450 was raised. This paid the preliminary expense of advertising and the expenses of Rev. Ostrom's assistants. During the meetings about $125 was raised at different collections which was used to defray incidental expenses, rent of the opera house, printing bills and other items. During the closing meetings a free will offering was taken and this amounted, we are told, to about $650. Less than $1250 for all the expense of the three weeks' campaign in which from three to five people were engaged. The Chautauqua demands a guarantee next year of $2000 for a single week and then complains that it will lose money.

The truth is that we have heard this criticism as to the "harvest" that Mr. Ostrom reaps from no one who contributed to the fund. We did hear a number of those who gave say that they wished he might have received more.

We think too, that Mr. Ostrom should be defended from the slur that he failed to impress church members with their duty and their responsibility, but rather intimated that church-membership was a convenient cloak for wrong-doing and hypocrisy. No man who heard Rev. Ostrom but will be able to refute this insinuation. He devoted at least as much of his time to stirring the consciences of those within the church as of those without. Mr. Ostrom did effective, conscientious work. He was not abusive, or slangy or sensational. He put in long hours and intense energy and an amount of grey matter his critics would find it impossible to give on account of limited resources. It seems to us that he does not deserve to find any lemons in the free will offering.

FINIS FOR MINISTER CRANE.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: The resignation of Minister Crane, in response to request from Secretary Knox cannot be otherwise than intensely disagreeable to Mr. Crane. He will have a great deal of sympathy in his embarrassment, but this sentiment toward Mr. Crane should not be accompanied by resentment toward Secretary Knox. The offense that caused the retirement of Mr. Crane was nothing more serious than an indiscretion, but it was an indiscretion of the sort that canceled his usefulness for the mission assigned to him.

It must not be assumed the call for Mr. Crane's resignation was intended as a punishment, or an example. Although not set forth in the official statement of the case, it may be accepted as a practical certainty that the state department had heard from the orient, and the intimation, was that Mr. Crane's continuance in the Chinese mission would be distasteful to Japan. An intimation to this effect would be sufficient to nullify Mr. Crane's chances of success in the investigations and negotiations he was expected to make. It may be assumed that President Taft and Secretary Knox will regret the unfortunate necessity of the case as much as any of Mr. Crane's friends. But a discredited diplomat in an important mission is worse than no diplomat. Mr. Crane, unwittingly, but none the less effectually, discounted himself as a possible minister to Pekin.

Mr. Crane did not seek the mission. He was selected for it by President Taft because of his presumed fitness for it. No one doubts he would have made a splendid record, had he made a good start. But he made a false step at the outset. It was a little thing, from any viewpoint but that of diplomacy. From the diplomatic viewpoint, under existing circumstances, it amounted to fatal error.

There is consolation for Mr. Crane. He is not the first good man who has thoughtlessly talked himself out of a job. Also he may reflect that he can make more money and sleep better nights while back at the familiar routine of business.

TAFT AND THE INSURGENTS.

New York Tribune: Whatever criticism may be directed at President Taft by republican insurgents because of his acceptance of the Payne tariff bill as the best he could secure and the best the party has ever passed, this class of republicans will find it difficult to escape the necessity of rallying to the support of the president at the coming session of congress. He has outlined a programme of legislation which is entirely in accord with the ideas they have been advancing on the stump and on the chautauqua platforms, and any failure to render the heartiest sort of support to the executive will lay them open to criticism by the very people they have educated to observe closely affairs in Washington.

It is entirely probable that a number of the insurgents will welcome the opportunity to ally themselves with the president, although a few of them will at heart approve no measure which does not originate with themselves and which cannot be passed "over the dead bodies of the republican organization" in congress. It is interesting to note, however, that Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, is already at work seeking to perfect a measure which shall provide for control by the interstate commerce commission of the issue of securities by interstate carriers, and it is entirely likely that other republicans who voted against the tariff bill will early seek an opportunity to father some of the legislation which the president has indicated he will recommend to congress.

It is, of course, doubtful if Mr. Taft, with all his optimism, expects congress to accomplish anything like the full legislative programme he has outlined, but even if it adopts a material part of his recommendations it will go far to satisfy that portion of the west which is disappointed in the tariff revision and to strengthen the president with a class of republicans who were encouraged by the insurgents to expect too much and who were, of course, disappointed.

Mr. Taft is far too little of the politician to have devised his legislative programme with any idea of bringing the insurgents "into line," but that such will be the effect of his first annual message to congress and of the influence which he will exert throughout the coming session seems to be assured, and if he accomplishes by his conservative and diplomatic methods anything like as much as he hopes for, the party will be in a position to present a united front to the enemy when the autumn elections of 1910 are at hand.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: Mr. Crane of Chicago loses the Chinese mission because he talked too much to a newspaper reporter, and it must be added, to his credit, that he did not try to save his office by declaring, as politicians generally do, that the reporter had misrepresented him.

The Register and Leader says, "If Captain Hull had pitched his response in a different key and had emphasized his services to the district in other ways, the political importance of his candidacy might not have been so clearly defined."

Nothing that Capt. Hull could have said, except to tender his resignation, would have pleased or satisfied the Register and Leader. For months it has made every possible effort to "clearly define the political importance of Hull's candidacy" in such a way as to defeat him if possible. It is the sheerest hypocrisy to pretend that anything Hull might have said would have made any difference to his scalp-hunters.

The Satsuma Orange was named after Japan's most beautiful queen because of its rare qualities and the beauty of its skin. A full grown Satsuma Orange Tree, with fruit and blossoms will be exhibited at the National Horticultural Exposition at Council Bluffs, November 15-20. It will be one of the Texas exhibits and will be taken up roots and all and will be seen as it grows in that state. Every variety of fruit grown in south Texas will be shown including Kumquats, Magnolia Figs and hundreds of other kinds of fruits and vegetables.

JOHN BAYLES.

The sudden death of a man like John Bayles brings to all of us a swift realization of the nearness of eternity. He had lived in the county so many years, he had so many loving friends and so many loving enemies, that he had become an institution rather than an individual.

No one could think of Manilla without the picture of the bluff, outspoken, hard hitting, soft-hearted John Bayles, coming into his mind. He did not have a college education and he was not rich, but no man in southern Crawford was ever able to muster so many friends. He was a politician of the old battling school. He loved a good caucus fight whether he won or lost. We have heard Manillaites exclaim, "Yes, John licked us all to pieces, but he's a mighty good fellow just the same."

Theodore Roosevelt could not have beaten John Bayles for Assessor of Nishnabotny township. For years he was the township "road boss" and he knew every inch of the township and all about every man and every family that lived within its limits.

He had a shrewd sense of humor that served him in good stead, and if there was anything he would not do for a friend his friends never found it out.

We were with him at Waterloo at a state convention, and together we listened to the impassioned appeal of a Salvation Army preacher and as we turned away there was a mist in John Bayles' eyes and a catch in his voice and that evening he told us something of the sorrows that had come to him; something of the battles he had had to fight; something of the disappointments; something of the aspirations and the affections that held him to his task. In our little, petty political strivings we have fought with John Bayles and we have fought against him, but we are glad at this time to be able honestly to say that we always had a warm affection for him, and that he knew it.

Kindness and genuine human sympathy were the key-notes of this lovable character and it will be many years before the memory of his shrewd sayings, his clever witticisms, and his all embracing friendliness shall fade from the minds of those who knew him during his many years as a resident of Crawford.
