Side Lights on Next Sunday's Lesson for Teachers and Pupils.

By CHAS. K. MEYERS

Feb. 20, The Golden Rule—Temperance Lesson, Matt. 7:1-12. Before treating of the temperance feature of the lesson we desire to speak briefly of three other important thoughts made prominent by Jesus in the verses under consideration. First, We are told to be considerate as to the manner in which we pass judgment on the conduct of those about us. We are warned to first be sure we are not ourselves doing things equally as bad, if not worse, than the person we are tempted to condemn. We are told by Jesus that with what measure we mete or judge others it shall be meted to us again. Paul in Romans 14:4 calls attention to the fact that our brother is God's servant and He will judge him. Paul also says that God will judge by the intent of the heart, which of course is the true way.

Second, We are told to ask of God what we desire. The promise is made that we shall get what we ask for. In other places we are told that our requests must not be based on selfishness but that like Jesus in the garden we must say, "Not my will but thine be done." Third, Jesus reminds us that earthly parents are ready to do good things for their children and that our loving Father in heaven is more ready than these to give good things to them who ask Him. Thus prayer is encouraged and the tender loving heart of God made manifest.

We have heard those who would stand up for the liquor traffic state that the bible does not condemn the drinking habit. A most foolish claim, for the entire teachings of the new testament denounce sin, proclaim that each is his brother's keeper, and that no one should so act as to lead another into wrong doing. The Golden Rule, which all know so well, is today made the verse on which to make a temperance lesson. One cannot keep the great rule and be doing things which will undermine his health and brain and lead other into degradation.

The liquor habit, and its associate evils, is the greatest foe which the bible religion has today. Saloons are the places from which come the men and boys who are the hardest to make live as the bible demands. From our point of view the man or woman who upholds liquor drinking and sets the example of drinking, will have a fearful account to answer for before God. To encourage one's child to drink is a fearful thing and evil results will be visited on the head of the offender. Jesus says that it were better that a man never were born, than that he lead one of the little ones astray, adding this sin would weigh down a man as a mill stone about his neck when he was in the midst of the sea.

We have always been a believer in having the children sign the temperance pledge. We hope that in the Sunday Schools teachers will take occasion to see that all children who have not signed the pledge do so at once. To be the means of saving one child from the curse of the drink habit is a record which God will honor. The cause of temperance is gaining every day but this only comes from the earnest work and prayers of the christian people of the world who live up to their best light.

"Where are you going?" asked Orde quietly.

"I'm going to get myself a drink in my bedroom," he snapped. "Any objections?"

"No. After you get your drink I want to talk to you."

Newmark snarled at him: "You needn't be afraid I'll run away. How'd I get out of town?"

Orde looked thoughtfully at Heinzman's affidavit, which, duly disinfected, had been handed him by Dr. McMullen as important. Then he arose to his feet and glided softly across the room to take a position close to the door through which Newmark had departed. Finally the door swung briskly inward. Like a panther Orde sprang forward. He plucked Newmark's arms to his side, where he held them immovably with one of his own. The other hand he ran down Newmark's right arm to the pocket. There followed an instant of resistance. With a sharp cry of pain Newmark snatched his hand out and gazed amazedly at the half-crushed fingers. Orde drew forth the revolver Newmark had grasped in the coat pocket. He spilled out the cartridges and tossed the empty weapon to Newmark.

"There's your plaything," said he. "So you wanted that affidavit, did you?"

He paused.

"I don't need to tell you that I've got you," said he finally, "nor what I think of you. I can send you over the road for the best part of your natural days; also I've got these notes and the mortgage."

"Quit it," growled Newmark. "Send me up and be d—d!"

"That's the question," went on Orde slowly. "You hurt me pretty bad, Joe. I thought of you as a friend. I had a hard time getting over that part of it. We've been together a good many years now, and as near as I can make out you've been straight as a string with me for eight of them. Then I suppose the chance came and before you knew it you were in over your neck."

"Oh, for God's sake, drop that preaching. It makes me sick!" broke out Newmark.

"I'm not preaching," said Orde, "and even if I were I've paid a good many thousands of dollars. It seems to buy the right to say what I d—n please. And if you think I'm working up to a Christian forgiveness racket you're mistaken. I'm not. I don't forgive you."

"Well, turn me over to your sheriff and let's get through with this," said Newmark sullenly.

Orde rose.

"Look here, Newmark, that's just what I've been coming to, just what I've had such a hard time to get hold of. I'm not going to hand you over to any sheriff. I'm going to let you off. No," he continued, in response to Newmark's look of incredulous amazement, "it isn't from any fool notion of forgiveness. I told you I didn't forgive you. But I'm not going to burden my future life with you. That's just plain, ordinary selfishness. I suppose I really ought to jug you, but if I do I'll always carry with me the thought that I've taken it on myself to judge a man. And I don't believe any man is competent to judge another."

Newmark, who had listened to this rambling exposition with curiosity, broke into a laugh.

"You've convicted me," he said. "I'm a most awful failure. I thought I knew you, but this passes all belief."

Orde brushed this speech aside as irrelevant.

"Our association, of course, comes to an end. There remain the terms of settlement. I could fire you out of this without a cent, and you'd have to git. But that wouldn't be fair. I don't give a hang for you, but it wouldn't be fair to me. Now, as for the northern peninsula timber, you have had seventy-five thousand out of that and have lent me the same amount. Call that quits. I will take up your note when it comes due and destroy the one given to Heinzman. For all your holdings in our common business I will give you my note without interest and without time for $100,000. That is not its face value nor anything like it, but you have caused me directly and indirectly considerable loss. I don't know how soon I can pay this note, but it will be paid."

"All right," agreed Newmark. "Does that satisfy you?"

"I suppose it's got to."

"Very well. I have the papers here all made out. They need simply to be signed and witnessed. Timbul is the nearest notary. Come," said he.

In silence the two walked the block and a half to the notary's house. Finally the papers were executed. In the street Newmark paused significantly, but Orde did not take the hint.

"Are you coming with me?" asked Newmark.

"I am," replied Orde. "There is one thing more."

In silence once more they returned to the shadowy low library. Newmark threw himself into the armchair. He was once again the coldly calculating, cynical observer. Orde turned to face him.

"You have five days to leave town," he said crisply. "Don't ever show up here again. Let me have your address for the payment of this note."

He took two steps forward.

"You're a dirty, low-lived skunk. If you think you're going to get off scot free you're mighty mistaken."

Newmark half arose.

"What do you mean?" he asked in some alarm.

"I mean that I'm going to give you about the worst licking you ever heard told of," replied Orde, buttoning his coat.

Five minutes later Orde emerged from Newmark's house, softly rubbing the palm of one hand over the knuckles of the other.

He turned out of the side street. His own house lay before him. He stopped, then stole forward softly until he stood looking in through the doorway.

Carroll sat leaning against the golden horn, her shining head with the soft shadows bent until it almost touched the strings. Her hands were straying idly over accustomed chords and rich modulations, the plaintive half music of reverie.

Orde crept to her unheeded. Gently he clasped her. She sank back against his breast with a happy little sigh.

"Kind of fun being married, isn't it, sweetheart?" he said.

"Kind of," she replied, and raised her face to his.

THE END.

Tennyson's Love For Birds.

Alfred Tennyson was all his life a great lover of the woods and fields. Trees, birds and flowers were his everyday companions, and he faithfully studied the habits of Dame Nature's English nurslings. The lark, the nightingale, the owl and the linnet were his favorite birds. He was also greatly interested in the sea birds, the peregrine falcons, the cormorants, seagulls, etc., and in the long legged sea birds, the visitors to marshes and pools. He thought the cuckoo, of which he has written in "Locksley Hall," a very noble bird and loved its wild call over the marshes. There are many references to birds native to England in his poems, and all of them show a thorough acquaintance with the individual characteristics of the different species.

At Farringford the poet's garden was the home of the wild birds of the hedgerows. The blackbird and robin and the smaller birds flocked there in great numbers, and it was considered far more important that they should feel welcome there than that the fruit should be permitted to ripen undisturbed or the garden be kept in proper order.

Domesticated birds also Tennyson numbered among his friends. Brilliant peacocks and more sober doves and pigeons, he loved them all.

A Helpful Suggestion.

The young man had married the rich man's daughter and wasn't killing himself with work to support her. One day the father called him up to talk to him.

"Look here," he said emphatically, "why don't you go to work?"

"I don't have to," the son-in-law replied, with brazen effrontery.

"Well, you will have to."

"Why will I?"

"Because, sir, I can't live always to support you."

"But you will leave us something?"

"Not much, I won't. There won't be anything to leave."

The son-in-law was alarmed.

"Great Jupiter!" he exclaimed. "You don't mean to tell me that you have nothing?"

"That's about it."

The son-in-law devoted himself to profound thought for several seconds.

"I have a suggestion to offer," he said in a businesslike manner.

"What is it?" asked the old gent.

"Well, I suggest that you take out a $20,000 life insurance on yourself to save wear and tear on my mind."—London Answers.

Stops Lameness

Much of the chronic lameness in horses is due to neglect. See that your horse is not allowed to go lame. Keep Sloan's Liniment on hand and apply at the first sign of stiffness. It's wonderfully penetrating—goes right to the spot—relieves the soreness—limbers up the joints and makes the muscles elastic and pliant.

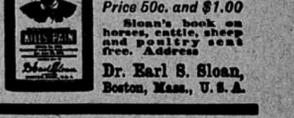

Here's the Proof.

Mr. G. T. Roberts of Resaca, Ga., R.F.D. No. 1, Box 43, writes:—"I have used your Liniment on a horse for sweeney and effected a thorough cure. I also removed a spavin on a mare. This spavin was as large as a guinea egg. In my estimation the best remedy for lameness and soreness is

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. H. M. Gibbs, of Lawrence, Kans., R.F.D. No. 3, writes:—"Your Liniment is the best that I have ever used. I had a mare with an abscess on her neck and one sore bottle of Sloan's Liniment entirely cured her. I keep it around all the time for galls and small swellings and for everything about the stock."

Sloan's Liniment will kill a spavin, curb or splint, reduce wind puffs and swollen joints, and is a sure and speedy remedy for fistula, sweeney, founder and thrush.
