TWO DENISON SALOONS CLOSED

Decision of Supreme Court on Moon Law Places Council in Embarrassing Position.

JOHN SAGGAU AND KLINKER GO

Arrangements Made Whereby They Sell Their Stocks to More Fortunate Dealers Who Remain

The late decision of the supreme court, interpreting the Moon law, put a crimp in the calculations of the saloon keepers throughout the state, who flattered themselves that nothing in the law could operate to put them out of business and that any saloon doing business at the time the Moon law was passed could renew its permit from the city council and operate as long as a petition of general consent was in force.

The holding of the court is that while the law went into effect on July 4, 1909, certain limitations on the rights of the saloon dated from the passage of the act on April 15, 1909. The court holds that where there were more than the legal number of saloons in operation at the time the law was passed a legal permit could not afterwards be obtained by a saloon not then in business under any consideration and not by one then in operation after the general consent, then in force, had expired.

The effect of the holding of the supreme court is to compel a reduction of the number of saloons to the requirements of the Moon law, that is, not more than one saloon for each one thousand people, and it becomes the duty of the city council to see that the law is complied with.

It should cause no surprise to hear that a great deal of dissatisfaction results from the action of city councils where saloons are operated in reducing the number to conform to the law. It is proving embarrassing for councils as well as saloon keepers, but nevertheless it is a duty which must be discharged.

The city council of Denison on Friday night undertook the unpleasant task of deciding what saloons could continue and what ones should go out of business, and it is inevitable that criticism must follow that action.

It is said that some arrangement was made among the saloon keepers themselves and that those who remain will make up something to those who retired so that the blow will prove less severe than otherwise.

Under the action of the council Martin Saggau, T. C. McCarthy and P. T. Flynn remain in business and John Saggau and John Klinker retire.

The many friends of John Saggau regret that he was not permitted to continue in business in view of his conservative record and the enterprise he has shown in building up the south side of Broadway. The Review, while recognizing the embarrassing situation in which the council was placed in having to settle the question, does not consider itself retained to defend or criticize its action, but under all the circumstances it perhaps would be just as well to postpone criticism of the action of the council at least until all the circumstances which governed its action are understood.

It was inevitable from the beginning that some one must be disappointed and if not those who retired then at least two of those who were retained. It is said the council considered the order in which the saloons applied for permits and favored the three first making application.

We hear that at Schleswig John H. Krohnke is allowed to run, while the saloons of F. W. Mohr and Matt Lorenzen are closed. At Charter Oak Marcus Wickman is open, while the other two are closed pending contempt proceedings against them.

At Vall Ted Kenney is given consent by the town council and consent withdrawn from the others.

An old-fashioned snow storm starting Monday night left Denison and vicinity completely covered with from twelve to eighteen inches of snow, and zero weather is predicted. The east and west roads are badly drifted, and the rural carriers have difficulty in making their trips.
