SIGNALS BEING INSTALLED.

Milwaukee Railroad Installing Protective Signal System to Prevent Trains from Colliding

Manilla, July 14—(Special to the Review)—The Milwaukee railroad is installing a protective signal system, such as the Chicago & Northwestern centrally installed, that will protect its trains from almost any kind of collision.

Already work has been started on installing these signals every two miles on the right of way between Chicago and Council Bluffs. High tension wires are being strung and wells are being set every two miles along the right of way for the operation of this modern signal service.

With this modern improvement the Milwaukee will be amply as well equipped as other trunk lines across the country.

New London is oiling the business streets.

July 20—Moses Called to Deliver Israel. Ex. 3:1-14.

It will be remembered that when the Apostle Paul made his defense before King Agrippa as told us in the 26th of the Acts, he made this immortal statement: "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." This was the testimony of the great apostle and we find him a power in spreading forth the gospel of Jesus the Christ. From the lesson of this week it will be seen that in the days of long ago, 1500 years before Christ was born, a man was given a heavenly vision also, and that acting in accordance with what he was told to do he became one of the greatest men of all times. Let us see as to this vision.

It will be recalled that Moses after his vain attempt to free his people by his own methods, had left Egypt and wandered out in the Arabian desert. There he became part of the household of one Jethro and married one of his daughters. For occupation he tended the sheep of his father-in-law. He was said to have been forty years old when he entered the desert and now nearly his life years had been doubled, and he was eighty years old. We are not misjudging him when saying that while remembering the woes of his people back in Egypt he did not think for a moment of ever personally engaging in a contest for setting them at liberty. He may have been believing his life a great failure, getting only comfort out of the thought that he had done the right thing in refusing to become an Egyptian prince, and being a Jew in practice, as well as by birth.

Moses had the wisdom, training, ability, but needed something of the extraordinary to arouse him to action. At the time of his call he asked for some visible sign that God was specially with him. It will be remembered that in later years Gideon would not believe that he had been chosen as the deliverer of his people until he saw a visible sign such as the dry and wet fleece. Then he was ready to go.

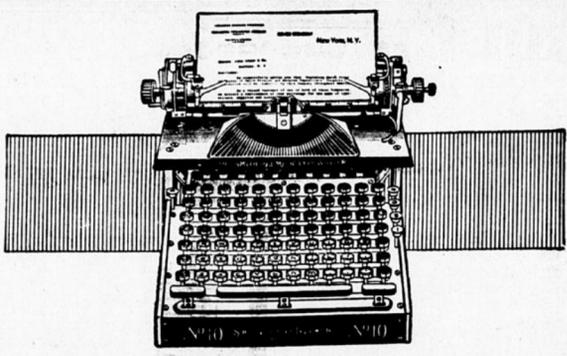

Moses had his vision in this way: He was out tending his sheep on the plains and dreary mountains on a certain day, when his observing eye discovered what seemed to him a bush of the desert on fire, and the strange thing about it was that the bush was not consumed, did not fall down into ashes. He decided to make closer observation, when what must have been his surprise, a voice called to him, "Moses, Moses." He responded, "Here am I." Then the voice called to take off his shoes, as he stood on holy ground.

Now comes the command to Moses. He is given to understand that God the Jehovah whom he worshipped was talking to him and he was told that he was about to be sent to appear before the ruler of Egypt with the request that the Israelites, his people, be allowed to depart out of slavery and bondage.

Understanding the greatness of the task, Moses did not rush to the undertaking with enthusiasm. He knew how hard it would be to get the Egyptians to release their slaves, and how difficult it was to gain the leadership of the Jews. He made the plea that he was not gifted with oratory, was not a persuasive speaker, and this was helped out by the promise that Aaron his brother should be spokesman for him. Later he wanted a sign of his divine authority and was told to throw the staff he had in his hand on the ground, and on it becoming a snake, was directed to grasp it by the tail when it was the original staff again. It would appear that when once convinced that God was with him, he faltered not.

It is the men and women who have a vision and then are not disobedient to it, who make a great success in the christian life. Paul on receiving his vision was not disobedient and his name ranks in the highest place. Of course we cannot have mountain top enthusiasm, live in the blaze of superior light, be surrounded by sympathizing friends encouraging us on every day of our lives. If we expect this, failure is certain. The vision, the call for service, the determination to consecrate one's life to God's cause, must be so strong as to carry one right over the discouraging places. The remembrance of the vision or call must be stored deep in the heart, and thinking upon it give enthusiasm when far removed from the seeming sources of these. It need not be said, however, that God is ever at hand and prayer to Him will bring strength.

Of the many helpful things for us from the lesson of today might be mentioned the following: First. Meekness, a humble spirit is no hindrance for God's work if we have His spirit with us. Second. One failure like that of Moses' first attempt to free his people does not show that success cannot come when conditions are better, and we are undertaking the task with new enthusiasm. Third. Our minds should be alert to note the strange and supernatural things which come in our path, with ear ready to hear the voice of God. Fourth. The command to remove his shoes, given Moses, can teach us reverence for holy things, and that there are times when respect for God should make us calm, respectful, ready to listen. Fifth. While it is well to look at every call for duty calmly weighing out the possibilities, yet there is such a thing as too much drawing back, failure to give proper importance to divine help to overcome difficulties. Sixth. Let us be like Paul and Moses, true to our vision when once convinced that it is given us, and let nothing dim our determination to succeed at the work to be done.

Complete Visible Writing This is the great distinctive feature of the Model 10 Smith Premier Typewriter

Complete Visible Writing means not only that the writing itself is visible, but that the operating machinery which produces the writing is also visible. Above all, it means that the keyboard is completely visible. Why? Because it is the only typewriter having a key for every character—hence the character printed by each key is always the same. This distinctive feature has won for the Smith Premier Typewriter a vast army of loyal users.
