Four hundred years ago eating was practically confined to two meals a day, but in many parts the second or evening meal was of such a protracted character that laws were passed limiting its duration. Thus at Berne there was a law against persons sitting at table more than five hours. At Bale from 10 o'clock in the morning to 6 o'clock in the evening was the maximum permitted, but the town council was unable to practice its own counsels of perfection and on great occasions finished in private. In Saxony the innkeeper was forbidden to serve more than four dishes at one meal. Give Him Time. "That's young Williams. They tell me his wife has a bunch of money. 'Well, that's not his fault. They have only been married a little over three months.'"—Philadelphia Record.
