

WALL LAKE ITEMS

Frankly, I am swamped, after endeavoring to keep track of the donations to the Red Cross auction sale. To have them brought in by those who had not reported their intentions in such amount and at such a busy time (some were brought in after the sale had been going on for an hour) prevents giving credit to many. For instance, there was 115 bushels of oats, corn in generous amounts, potatoes, chickens, from dressed ones to Dewey Robinson and Francis Martin's prize winners, geese, a turkey that is generally worth its weight in gold, etc. The date of the sale and the captured groundhogs, were more than a mere coincidence, and its exhibition and its mate, the badger, netted $17.80. As the bidding ceased near midnight, a number of the prominent articles of the town were caught with their hands to which they had no right in their possession and were brought before his honor, the Mayor, by whom they were fined, the fines amounting to $33. Coffee and sandwiches were served by some of the Red Cross workers, headed by Mrs. Jolley, and a goodly sum realized. However, as much still remains unsold that it will be concluded next Saturday afternoon beginning at 1:30 p. m. at the opera house. All who wish to assist in Red Cross work and did not get in on Saturday's sale, or are willing to help again are asked to bring their donations at that time. There will be potatoes, chickens, fancywork, cakes, corn, onions, and various other articles for sale that day. The lunch will be served and donations of sandwiches, coffee and cream will be needed. The sale Saturday totalled over $1,000. Let's have another big afternoon with everyone there that missed the first and raise this to at least $1,500. The articles donated from nearly every family in town and all the surrounding country, but the buyers were not so well distributed. This work belongs to us all, now if all will get back of it in the buying as well, we can make it a much bigger success. Cols. Tequist and our own Jas. McLaughlin worked like harvesters all the time and others donated all their time and strength that day to the task but other helpers who will volunteer their services again will be much appreciated.
