The revelations of the dealings of the bolsheviks with the Germans remind one of the time when the woolly lamb set out to bunco the wolf.

The trouble with the hunting season this year is that the hunters can't bag any guides, the latter being all drafted. After telling their boy help all summer that they are idle and lazy, the farmers are keenly anxious to engage them again for next year. After growling because army supplies aren't going over faster, some people kick because of the sugar shortage which is caused by taking ships to carry army material in.

About now the boy who only last year felt honored to have the business men notice him has become a commissioned officer and bankers and manufacturers are proud to be seen with him. The politicians are very honest people, as they believe in paying their political debts to people from whom they expect future favors. Only buy one pound of candy at a time and not often at that, is the advice of the food conservers. Which is considered highly patriotic by the young man with a best girl to finance.
