do. When they came for judgment he set forth the law in that particular case. He was trying to be the "whole thing" as we of our day would express it.

The visit of Jethro has won a famous place by his advice given Moses at this time. It was a setting forth of the benefits of cooperation, organization, division of labors.

Jethro approached Moses with due deference and did not give advice until he felt it would receive consideration. When he knew Moses would take advice kindly he told him that he ought to write out and instruct others as to God's plans, laws and ordinances, so that he alone would not be called upon to judge disputes, and be posted. Jethro further outlined a plan that the people be divided in groups, leaders or judges being set over each, these to have charge of minor matters and Moses only to give consideration to questions of great import. Happily Moses saw the wisdom of the advice of his father-in-law and followed it.

The two great points of this lesson are readily noted. First, the verities of Jethro that on the showing made by God in His dealings with the Hebrews. He should be praised and acknowledged to be superior to any God. Second, the best success in any undertaking will come with a division of labors, with organization. This we can apply both in business and religion. Jethro now passes off the scene of action never to be heard of again, but he had left a name which was of sufficient importance that a world around Sabbath school lesson will be studied about him and that shows he was a man of some consequence in history.

The fellow who skinned out of going to war on some very thin excuse, is convinced that the man who only got as far as the French camps is not much of a hero.

The politicians all have nephews, cousins and personal heelers who have the most admirable qualifications for scouping soldiers' monuments for their home towns.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES
Side Lights on Next Sunday's Lesson for Teachers and Pupils
Edited by Charles K. Meyers

Feb. 9. Jethro's Visit to Moses, Exodus 18.

Our lesson today brings before us further scenes in the life of Moses and the Children of Israel while in the wilderness. It will be remembered that Moses was the leader sent from God to take the Hebrews from their captivity in Egypt. He had led them out and at the time of our lesson was with them in the desert of Arabia.

It was in the forty years when Moses was leading the life of a tender of sheep in this very desert, that he took to himself a wife. She was the daughter of Jethro and it was his sheep which Moses tended. Since those days Moses had come to great fame. While Moses and his people were not far from the living place of Jethro, he gave the camp a visit and what happened is the Sabbath school lesson of this day.

Moses gave his father-in-law a most gracious reception and then told him as to what he had been able to do through the help of his God. Jethro was much interested and remained at the camp to see things for himself. Jethro was not a Hebrew or a follower of the God of Moses, but he was a great man in his community, religious leader in the land of Midian and we shall see he was wise and knowing. When he heard all that had come to the Hebrews and Moses he gave this as his verdict: "Blessed be the Lord who hath delivered you out of the hands of the Egyptians. Now I know that the Lord is greater than all the gods, for in the things wherein they dealt proudly, He was above them."

We may well pause right here to say that the verdict of the heathen priest over four thousand years ago can well be the one of the people of today. He had seen but little in truth of the wondrous works of God, yet he was willing to make the confession he did. When we of our day have before us the entire bible record of the old testament and then the new with its history of the life of Jesus, Paul, and the apostles, and added to these the triumphs of christianity in the days since the year of the early church; it is shame upon any one to hold back from declaring that the God of the bible is the divine one, and worthy of belief in and adoration.

Jethro joined with Moses, Aaron and the other Hebrew leaders in making a burnt offering to God and worshipping Him.

Jethro remained at the camp to see further about what was going on. Among other things he was struck by the fact that Moses was a most busy man, the Hebrews coming to him in great numbers all the day long. He therefore questioned Moses what this meant and was told Moses as the leader was also the law giver, the judge of all disputes arising among the Hebrews. It would appear that Moses up to this time had not tried to tell the people much about the things he knew as to what God wanted them to

KITCHEN WAS IMPROVED

"I was called into the country last spring," said a home demonstration agent, "by a woman who said that she was having trouble with her bread.

"I found the kitchen very poorly arranged—cupboard, stove, kitchen cabinet and washstand scattered about the room promiscuously. It was necessary to walk clear around the room several times to get a meal. The stove smoked. A better arrangement was suggested.

"This month a second visit was made for the purpose of remodeling clothing," the agent continued. "The kitchen walls had been covered with oilcloth, the cupboard and kitchen cabinet grouped near the cellar door, the stove placed near and in a corner out of draft so it did not smoke. A new sink for the cistern pump had been installed and the housewife reported the work much easier."
