Sunday School Notes

Sidelights on Next Sunday's Lesson for Teachers and Scholars. Edited by C. K. Meyers. Sept. 26. A Review Lesson. The lessons of the last quarter have been most interesting. They have made up the basis for some of the best of the bible stories. First, was David, and there comes a time when one can forget David and his record as a boy, young man and devout lover of God. The career of Saul has been before us. He it was who started a mad and reckless young man ready to humbly do God's will, only to later become puffed up, selfish, intolerant and finally drifting into rank disobedience. It was pitiful to see in his later years, how he struggled to hold his kingship after God had said that he must lose it for willful disobedience. It was ever a losing game with him from the day Saul gave utterance to the words that the kingship should leave the family of Saul. Then there came the history of Solomon, the child of good fortune, who was blessed with wisdom for a king and who upon succeeding to the kingdom on the death of David was able to make a great name for himself as the builder of the magnificent temple at Jerusalem. The great apostle Paul declared the history of the Old Testament heroes was written for our information so that we might be warned by the evils they fell into and rejoice over their virtues. The faith in God shown by David as a youth was beautiful to think upon. There was no middle ground with him in God's service. One must be either for or against Him, and no matter how powerful one might be if he defied God certain overthrow was sure to come. David believed that "One with God is a majority," and acted on that basis in his handling of the problems of life. Saul made fine example of the young man who starts out to do right but is evergreen by the lust for power not gained by obeying the will of God. Many plans may seem to give success for the time being, but only God can bring to pass in a life things which are truly great. The career of Solomon showed that possession of wisdom does not in itself give the person having it immunity from temptations and the ability to fall into wickedness. Solomon's wisdom, his head turned by the wealth which flowed into his treasury, and the admiration of those about him, he gathered ad-vice to go to the needs of the kingdom, who thereupon rent the realm in two, and set up a separate government. There has come to most of us a better appreciation of the Psalm by the light we have had on the life of David. We can appreciate his words of repentance of sins, and the joy which followed when he felt his wrong doing had been forgiven. His conduct in going to God for mercy and pardon is an example to all of us who have been led into wrong doing, either by mischance or deliberate choice. If David could be pardoned, then the vilest one of us can be also. It is to be hoped that a review of the lives of David, Saul and Solomon will bring out such points as will make us all better and stronger for the christian life.

COKE!

We wish to state that we have two car loads of coke on hand. This is the well known Alabama Prepared coke which makes excellent fuel for base burners.

It looks as if there will be little if any hard coal available from now on and those who have not already secured their supply will do well to lay in a supply of this coke, which is the right size for use in base burners.

We do not expect that these two car loads will be in stock long and it is our advice to act early if you are in need of fuel for the base burner.
