Soul-Saving.

I am sick of the teacher's only strain,
I am sick of the school, and its vain,
I am sick of the book, and its vain,
I am sick of the pen, and its vain,
The same old song from the pulpit rail.

It seems to me like a old, old cry,
This telling a man that it is only dying
Of any importance here below
In saving him self from a future sting.

Far nobler, far better, it seems to me,
To tell a man to save some other;
To send him up and down through the world,
Seeking and saving his fallen brother;

To put him off on the beaten track,
Out into the hedge of sin and shame,
To teach and to tell the capities there,
The bounty and glory of virtue's name;

To rescue the starving one from death;
To rescue the dying one from crime;
To reach the goal of grace and help,
To the weary one on the bars of time

To seek out those whom the world forgets;
To take the orphan on a homeless track;
To hold the erring one in the heart,
And strengthen it with a purpose brave;

To do the little ones of the world,
The things which the world does to the great;
To walk the world with a purpose grand,
And, with eye on the goal, go to wait.

If a man does this, I dare affirm
That he can afford to forego all
About going to heaven, and give his whole time
To the work of saving his neighbor here
—Hattie Tappin Green, in Star in the West.

Tobias—his name to Tobias.

Yes, his first name is Tobias,
And his last is Tobias,
And his eyes are on the hills,
So to speak;

And his eye is on the hills,
And his eye is on the hills,
And his eye is on the hills,
And his eye is on the hills,

Though he is a clerk and a drummer
When he is his clerk and a drummer
Yet Tobias—his name to Tobias,
And his eye is on the hills,

And his eye is on the hills,
And his eye is on the hills,
And his eye is on the hills,
And his eye is on the hills,

Now it seems to me so funny
That his name is Tobias,
Should be loaded down with money,
So to speak;

While the wife of his dignity,
Who you see is a her wispy,
Has to scrub about the city
On his neck.

How to Pay a Compliment.

To pay a compliment is to tell the truth, and to tell it as though you meant it. And the only way to do that is to mean it. If a girl is pretty or accomplished; if she plays well, or sings well, or dances well, or talks well; if, in a word, she pleases you, in the name of common sense, shouldn't she be told of it? Don't hurt it out before everybody. That will only serve to make her feel uncomfortable and make you appear ridiculous. Say it quietly when opportunity offers, but say it strongly. Convey the idea distinctly and fully, so that there may be no mistake about it. But don't say it "officially." Formality is about the coldest thing known. More than one maiden has been made happy—say for half an hour—by a man's taking the trouble to say a pleasant thing about a toilet that he liked, and many of fashion's follies have been given up by girls when they noticed a discreet silence concerning them on the part of their gentleman friends. A bewitching little black-eyed beauty once said to a gentleman, "I like to have you say sweet things to me. It seems to come so easy and natural." In general terms, it may be said that it is always better to say an agreeable thing than a disagreeable one—better for all parties. The gallant who, when a young lady stepped on his foot while dancing and asked pardon, said, "Don't mention it; a dainty little foot like that wouldn't hurt a dandy," not only told the truth, but doubtless felt more comfortable than the poor who, when his foot was stepped on, roared out, "That's right, climb all over me with your great, clumsy hoofs."
