

The editor of the Journal says he suspects the patriotism of those who are for dropping party issues, because they are after office. He has had some experience in that sort of business, and has about as good a right as anybody we know of to know how those feel who act who are after office. Experience is the best teacher.

As the tide of civil war sweeps over the country, and the booming of cannon is heard along almost the whole length of the loyal States, there are a very few only who talk about parties and party platforms. The great body of the people are true to the Government, and are not willing to have their patriotism hemmed in by party lines or party divisions, or measured by party tests. They recognize the only division of parties to be that of the supporters of the Government on one side, and its opponents upon the other, and to this and this alone all must come at last. Those who are not for the Government are against it—and that is the plain issue before us. There is no middle ground.

We congratulate our neighbor of the Journal upon having discovered that the rebels are traitors, and are wickedly and maliciously fighting to break up the Government produced by the blood of the fathers of the revolution. This, we suppose, puts an end to the idea of compromise for the present; for we put too high an estimate upon the patriotism of our neighbor to suppose that he wishes to compromise with "base traitors" while they are "wickedly and maliciously fighting to break up the Government." He will certainly wait till they are done "wickedly and maliciously fighting." As powder and lead is the only remedy for diseases of this sort, we expect to hear no more of compromise in this locality—at least, not from the Journal, which we are sure, can have no sort of objection to the subjugation of "base traitors."

The affairs of Europe are likely to be further complicated by the Roman question. It is now confidently stated that the Emperor of France will very soon recall his army from Rome and leave the Pontifical Government to the tender mercies of the Roman people, and that, upon his doing so, the Austrian and Spanish Governments will supply the Pope with another army with which to support his authority and protect him against the encroachments of Victor Emanuel. This will, of course, bring these Governments into collision with Sardinia, and lead not only to a further prosecution of the Italian revolution, but involve the Continental Powers in a general war. Louis Napoleon does not seem likely to permit so marked a condemnation of his policy to go unrebuked and may find it necessary to go to war with both Austria and Spain, in which, of course, under all the circumstances he will have Victor Emmanuel as an ally, as in the late war with Austria alone. Such a war will be likely to open again the question of the balance of power upon the Continent, which will create a necessity for the interference of England as the means of counteracting the schemes and checking the ambition of France. And neither Russia nor the German States can remain uninterested in the result of such a contest. It is possible, therefore, that a general war may be the result of these complications—and if it is, England and France will have quite enough on their hands to regret it.

Editorial: Thinking that you would like to know what had become of the Old Eleventh, and having a few spare moments to-day, I thought I would post you a little.

We left Indianapolis last Friday a week ago, on the Lafayette & Indianapolis Rail Road, at 12 o'clock, night, and arrived at Lafayette the next morning, when we took the Washburn Valley Railroad and arrived at Alton on Sunday about 9 o'clock in the morning. We then went on board the steamer David Tatem, for St. Louis, where we arrived about noon and marched through the city to Camp Benton, a little North of the Fair Ground, where we went into Barracks. Gen. Fremont, I was informed, is erecting Barracks here to accommodate one hundred thousand men this Winter. I should think that twenty thousand could be easily accommodated in what is now finished. They are very comfortable and the men have plenty of room. I did not have time to look around and examine the defenses of the city, but understood that they are such that the traitors will never be able to bring sufficient force to take the city. We did not have much time to rest in camp. On Monday evening we received orders to march, and about midnight marched through the city and took the steamer Hannibal City, and at daylight left St. Louis for the River. We run all day but slowly, the River being very low, we struck twice on sand-bars but got off without much trouble. We got to Cape Girardeau about the middle of the afternoon, when the boom of a cannon warned us that we would have to land, which we did accordingly, but were detained only a few minutes. There are some seventeen hundred troops at this point, and the place is in no immediate danger. A few miles below here is the place where the rebels have been amusing themselves by firing into passing steamboats, and thinking that they might serve us in the same manner, we prepared for them by issuing thirty rounds of ball cartridges to the men, but they did not disturb us. We arrived at Cairo on Wednesday about 10 o'clock, a. m., and stayed there about one hour, but I did not have an opportunity to take a look at the fortifications. We steamed away from there and arrived at this place in the evening, and camped just in the city on a fine piece of ground where we have plenty of room to drill. We found the place almost wholly deserted of its inhabitants who had fled when the Union troops landed, but they have about got over their scare and are returning in large numbers.

They expected to be murdered, robbed, and the Lord only knows what, by the abolition army, but I am glad to say, a better feeling exists towards us since they have found out their mistake.

There are a large number of Union troops here, but how many I am not able to say, but think not less than twelve thousand. We are throwing up entrenchments, and in a short time will have the camp so fortified that all the force the enemy will be able to muster cannot drive us out. Gen. Smith, of the Regular Army, is in command, and from his appearance I should judge him to be a good officer. The discipline of camp is excellent—a great deal better than at any time while we were with Gen. Patterson. Martial Law has been declared here and every thing passes off perfectly quiet. The men are drilled six hours every day, and the officers have a leave of about an hour at noon. So you see we are all kept busy. The boys, as usual, are sporting for a fight, but I do not think they will get their desire gratified, for I do not think the enemy will ever attack us here, we will have to go after them. They are roaming around the country in small numbers, but there is no large body of them within sixteen miles. Our scouts had a little brush with some of their cavalry yesterday and cleaned them out, but I have not learned the particulars. We captured, the other day, a small steamer going up the Tennessee River, and got her one thousand barrels of flour, forty-eight barrels of whiskey and a large lot of crackers, bound for secedes.

I believe I have told you about all that would interest your readers, and will shut off. Yours, &c. J. W.

CAMP NEAR CROSS LANES, VA. Sept. 11th, 1864. EDITOR EXPRESS—Dear Sir: The tenth of this month adds another victory to our army. We have met the enemy and driven them from their strong position, on the Gauley near Cross Lanes. But before giving particulars, I will give you a sketch of our march from Clarksburg to this place, which may not be uninteresting to some of your readers:

After packing up on the morning of the 31st of August, we were detained some time getting the trains in motion; but about noon we started on the road to Weston, instead of Buchanan, as I supposed, pitching our tents fifteen miles from Clarksburg, near the village of Jane Low, situated on Hacker's Creek. After dark, on the 31st of September, we arrived at Weston, and laid over till morning. Nothing of interest transpired until we arrived at Balltown, which is forty-eight miles from Clarksburg. Here we found the 9th and 12th Ohio regiments. After leaving this place, we began to see evidences of the work of Gov. Wise. Here you may see where the road had been cut full of large trees; there you may see the grave of some poor fellow who had been way-laid and shot; a little further, I saw a horse lying at the side of the road, and his rider belonged to the Pennsylvania cavalry. Both were dead, and the rider stripped of his clothing and thrown aside.

We arrived at Sutton, sixty-six miles from Clarksburg, at noon on the 4th inst. Here our forces were divided into brigades, the first under Gen. Benham, composed of the 10th, 12th, and 13th Ohio regiments, and Gillmore and West's cavalry, and McMullin's artillery. The second, of the 9th, 28th and 47th, and Shrumback's cavalry and Capt. Mack's artillery, under Col. McCook. The third, of the 28th and 30th regiments, and Capt. Snyder's artillery. Here we were joined by Lieut. Kirby, Moore, Vickery and Dills. Leaving Sutton on the 7th, we crossed the little Birch mountain, which is six miles across, and camped on Birch river, where we remained over Sunday, waiting for the train. Our pickets were fired upon here, and driven to Big Birch, killed one man. We passed his grave the next day, near the road. The boys had stuck him in about eight inches, and went on.

On the morning of the 10th, when within a few miles of Summersville, we heard there were quite a number of secessionists in the town, consequently a considerable force was sent on; but upon entering town found it deserted, except a few women and children. While here our Company had a little fun, which our boys relished very much. While resting, two men were seen approaching the town, when, coming within two squares of a woman, was seen to run into the street and motion them back. At this they turned down the road, put up their horses, and were away. But our boys mounted their horses and gave chase. The chase was exciting, but a couple of shots brought them to, and they gave themselves up. The boys took from them an old fashioned carbine, a splendid Colt revolver, and a fine key bugle (one being a bugler), which Frank Stewart has got, and of which he is very proud, and the sword of Capt. Dyer, of the 7th Ohio Regiment, who was killed at the battle of Cross Lanes, and will send it to Capt. Dyer's family in Ohio.

These are young, smart and intelligent men, and belong in Parkersburg, Va. They are hot secessionists, and conversed freely; but would give no satisfaction in regard to Floyd. We proceeded on, and sent scouts out ahead to reconnoiter, and they found that the enemy were strongly fortified near Cross Lanes. We halted within two miles and a half of them, and formed in line. The first Brigade, under Gen. Benham, was ordered to advance—the 10th Ohio in the lead, under Col. Lytle—who advanced within two hundred yards of them when the enemy opened fire upon them. Col. Lytle received a slight wound in the leg, and his horse was killed. Jumping from his horse, he seized a rifle and fired, and I am told, killed one of their artillery men at the guns. Our men took their position in the edge of the timber, and opened upon the enemy, assisted by Capt. Snyder, with two 6-pound iron cannon, and Capt. McMullin, with four pieces of mountain howitzers.

The firing was incessant for fifty-two minutes, when it ceased for a short time. But brick firing was kept up by the Ohio boys, who had to watch for their heads over the trees, which were in the evening, Col. McCook, of the 34th Brigade, was ordered to advance. Waving his hat he shouted to his men—Now, boys, if you have a drop of Dutch blood in you, show it! Their cheers were deafening, as they started off on double quick. As he passed us, he shouted, "Now I will show you some Dutch fighting." They went in and fired a few rounds. The firing ceased on both sides at 7 o'clock and fifteen minutes.

This battle, having commenced at twenty-five minutes to 4 o'clock, lasted 3 hours and forty minutes. We slept on our arms, and when morning dawned the enemy was gone. A negro came over and told the General that they had left. It was ascertained that this was a fact, whereupon the fortifications were taken possession of. We found in it two stand of colors, one of which was inscribed the following words: "FLOYD GUARDS: THE PRICE OF LIBERTY IS THE BLOOD OF THE BRAVE."

All of which sounds very nice, and is worthy of a place on a banner in a nobler cause. I tried hard to get to the field early the next morning; but our Capt. and 1st Lieut. having gone down, the Company was left in charge of the 21 Lieutenant, and of course I did not get permission; but late in the forenoon I got off, and in a few minutes I stood upon the first battle field I ever saw. I started at one end of the breast-works and walked to the other, and from appearances they left in the wildest confusion; leaving arms, ammunition, stores, provisions, forage, camp equipments, tents, wagons, &c. &c. As I did not have time to count, I cannot give you the correct number of each article; and reports are very contradictory, in these exciting times; but I assure you that there is a large amount of ammunition, coffee, sugar, salt and two or three hundred stand of arms, from Sharps' rifle down to a six bit pocket pistol.

We took from them several prisoners whom they had taken of Col. Tyler at Cross Lanes. They say the enemy commenced carrying their killed, wounded and sick across the river early after the battle began, and that there are a great many of their army sick. From them I also understand that their forces numbered 4,000. They crossed the river on a temporary bridge which they destroyed, but leaving several wagons and teams on this side which are in our possession.

I cannot give you a correct estimate of our killed and wounded; I have various reports. I place it at thirty killed and eighty to ninety wounded. Our company met with a loss of one man by the accidental discharge of his pistol. The shot took effect just below the collar bone on the right side. He never spoke. His name was Miller, and was from Henderson county, Kentucky.

SEPTEMBER 12.—Last night Sergeant Long, with ten men, was sent with dispatches to Gen. Cox at Gauley bridge, starting about 10 o'clock; they had got some eighteen miles when they were fired into from the roadside, which threw them into confusion. Part of them have returned, Sergeant Long also. There are still three missing. They think there were twenty shots fired. Serg. Long has started again with five men, it now being 8 o'clock. I shall believe, until I hear better, that it was Gen. Cox's pickets who fired upon them. I had forgotten to say that the enemy were very strongly fortified. Their breastworks extended one mile and three quarters along the top of the hill.

One o'clock.—One of our missing boys have just got back. They were fired upon by Secessionists. John Collins of Terre-Haute was out all night. They have his horse and arms. He says that he saw a Secessionist riding his horse this morning. He crawled about a mile on his hands and knees and came to a house. The old lady cooked him something to eat—a large box ready to put him in and watched while he ate.

Two o'clock, p. m.—Sergeant Long has returned again, and reports a skirmish. But one of Cox's Lieutenants has just arrived, bringing three of the boys' horses. He reports that it was their own pickets. They have a company of scouts called "Snake Hunters," and who dress like many of the Secessionists, and 'twas them the boys fell in with.

I hardly expect this will reach you, so I will close by subscribing myself yours. W. S. G.

Good News from Bracken's Cavalry. The correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, writing from the headquarters of Gen. Rosecrans, in Western Virginia, says: Bracken's Indiana cavalry surrounded sixty rebels at Lexington yesterday, and captured the whole of them.
