

The Paths of Destiny.

Go your own way; let me go mine. For us the differing day-stars shine...

Go your own way; each has his own. For us the differing day-stars shone...

Go your own way; let each man's soul maintain its purpose and its goal.

Our lives have different aims and ends. Careers which satisfy like thine...

Across the hollow-sounding lakes whose low, recurrent thunder strikes...

BRIDE BY TELEGRAM.

By Mrs. Whitney.

"Send me down bride in full dress for Friday evening. H. Smith, Walkley Station."

"That was the tone of the telegram. Miss Betsy Blythe knew, because she read it over forty times, if she step it once. She picked it up on the red telegraph office, where the lucky recipient thereon had dropped it."

"There," she said, "I tell you Harold Smith was going to be married on the 5th."

"Goodness me!" said Arethusa. "It can't be possible," piped Pamela. "But who can be so bold as to tell you that?"

"That's the question," declared Miss Betsy, staring back at the poll-parter's cage in the window. "And Friday is to be the wedding day."

"Which Friday, I wonder?" said Miss Arethusa. "Why, this Friday, of course!" pronounced Miss Pamela.

"It's the 5th," said Miss Pamela. "The day after tomorrow, of course; or it would have been a deal easier and cheaper to write instead of telegraphing. Don't you see?"

"Friday's an unlucky day for a wedding," groaned Miss Betsy. "Just like Harold Smith to get married on a Friday," said Miss Pamela.

"He's always been a fan of what he calls 'superstitious' observations," said Miss Arethusa. "Well, I never!" said Miss Arethusa.

"Who is the bride, anyhow?" "It's she's a girl of my own spirit," said Miss Betsy.

"Who's the bride, anyhow?" "It's she's a girl of my own spirit," said Miss Betsy. "She's a girl of my own spirit," said Miss Betsy.

last taken their departure, Jesse looked at her mother in amazement, unmingled with mirth.

"Mamma," said she, "what do those old women mean?" "I think, dear," said Mrs. Mordaunt, "that they are the least bit unsettled in their minds—just a little crazy, you know."

And the Misses Blythe went away, exchanging mysterious glances and whispering to each other. "They cannot deceive us!"

"Oh, said she, rubbing her eyes to make sure that it was not a dream, 'this is a surprise party, is it? I'm sure I'm delighted to see you! Only it's a very early party, home!'"

"All about what?" said Mrs. Smith. "About the wedding," cried out the company in chorus.

"Who's wedding?" demanded Mrs. Smith. "Why, Harold's, to be sure!" they responded. "But Harold isn't going to be married," said Mrs. Smith.

"But Harold isn't going to be married," said Mrs. Smith. "He isn't even engaged! Good gracious! What can have put such a thing into people's heads?"

"It's the telegram," said Miss Pamela. "I don't know what you are talking about," said Mrs. Smith, in despair.

"Well, if you won't believe me, you will perhaps, believe your own eyes," said Miss Betsy Blythe, with dignity.

"Dear me," cried Mrs. Smith, at last comprehending the meaning of the telegram, "it's a network of cross-purposes. It's Betsy's big doll!"

"What?" cried Miss Arethusa, Miss Pamela, and Miss Betsy, in chorus. "What's more wildly echoed the rest of the assembly, crowding eagerly around."

"Mrs. Helena Smith's little daughter, across the street," explained Mrs. Smith. "It's her birth-night party, and an immense doll dressed as a bride was forwarded by express this afternoon."

"I saw it myself—a perfect beauty, with veil and wreath, white satin boots, buttoned up like gloves and long-wristed white kid gloves, entirely complete!"

"And you thought it was a doll?" "That my Harold was going to be married secretly, and had telegraphed to New York for his bride!"

"The old lady broke out into a fit of soft, sweet-sounding laughter, which shook her as it went down her throat of jelly. Everybody else laughed, except the three Misses Blythe. They only looked blank."

"But, now that you're here," added hospitable Mrs. Smith, "you'll stay to tea, all of you? But you must! The train doesn't leave until ten, and you'll be late for your party. Oh, I insist upon your staying to tea."

"The biggest teakettle in the house was put over to boil, at once; seven pounds of coffee were put into the pot, and the maids ran, one to the muffin-and-crummet store and cake bakery, another to the oyster stand, which luckily, was not yet set out for the night. And kind Mrs. Smith entertained her guests with fracions politeness."

"But there was no wedding and no Harold," said Mrs. Smith. "The old lady broke out into a fit of soft, sweet-sounding laughter, which shook her as it went down her throat of jelly."

FARMERS' CORNER.

Plant Fruit Trees. Many persons fail to set out trees and vines because they fear they will not live to eat the fruit of their own trees.

Leafless and Triumph Radishes. The Rural New Yorker recently made a comparison between the two unique varieties of radish—viz., Triumph and Leafless.

CHEVIOT SHEEP.

The above illustration, reproduced from a photograph, shows three specimens of this hardy breed of sheep—two ewes, the property of C. H. Marshall, Vergennes, Vt.

Peaches from Seed. The prevalence of yellow among peaches makes their propagation by budding a danger in spreading the disease.

Trapping Hen Hawks. Wherever there is low shrubbery around the house hens with broods of chicks will naturally seek that, less for the shelter than for protection against predators who might swoop down and carry off a young chick to be torn to pieces and eaten.

Improvement of Highways. Good roads are so popular in Connecticut that the State's appropriation for helping out the towns will not be larger enough to supply the demand.

How to Make a Fence. Take a cord rope 10, or 12 feet long, make noose in one end, tie the other end to spring pole, drive stubs in the ground in a circle 12 inches in diameter.

Feeding Green Oats. Horses will eat the stable or barnyard refuse of green oats, but a few have only light work to do, and a few green oats without injury.

Early Irish Potatoes. In the fall prepare a piece of ground for an early potato patch, open deep furrows, select small or green end potatoes, such as are neither salable nor suitable for your table, plant the whole potato as you would cut ones in the spring.

A Chicken's Growth. The question of how much will a chick gain is an interesting one. The following is about correct: The eggs weigh 2 ounces; the newly hatched chick weighs 1 1/2 ounces; at 1 week old, 2 ounces; 3 weeks old, 4 1/2 ounces; 4 weeks old, 6 1/2 ounces; 5 weeks old, 8 1/2 ounces; 6 weeks old, 10 1/2 ounces; 7 weeks old, 12 1/2 ounces; 8 weeks old, 14 1/2 ounces; 9 weeks old, 16 1/2 ounces; 10 weeks old, 18 1/2 ounces; 11 weeks old, 20 1/2 ounces; 12 weeks old, 22 1/2 ounces; 13 weeks old, 24 1/2 ounces; 14 weeks old, 26 1/2 ounces; 15 weeks old, 28 1/2 ounces; 16 weeks old, 30 1/2 ounces; 17 weeks old, 32 1/2 ounces; 18 weeks old, 34 1/2 ounces; 19 weeks old, 36 1/2 ounces; 20 weeks old, 38 1/2 ounces; 21 weeks old, 40 1/2 ounces; 22 weeks old, 42 1/2 ounces; 23 weeks old, 44 1/2 ounces; 24 weeks old, 46 1/2 ounces; 25 weeks old, 48 1/2 ounces; 26 weeks old, 50 1/2 ounces; 27 weeks old, 52 1/2 ounces; 28 weeks old, 54 1/2 ounces; 29 weeks old, 56 1/2 ounces; 30 weeks old, 58 1/2 ounces; 31 weeks old, 60 1/2 ounces; 32 weeks old, 62 1/2 ounces; 33 weeks old, 64 1/2 ounces; 34 weeks old, 66 1/2 ounces; 35 weeks old, 68 1/2 ounces; 36 weeks old, 70 1/2 ounces; 37 weeks old, 72 1/2 ounces; 38 weeks old, 74 1/2 ounces; 39 weeks old, 76 1/2 ounces; 40 weeks old, 78 1/2 ounces; 41 weeks old, 80 1/2 ounces;
