CONFESSIONS OF A SOLDIER

BY CAPTAIN FAY MITCHEL.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Gen. Heath is ordered to report to headquarters at Chattanooga. The aide is present at the interview. The general is shown an order for his arrest and court-martial and is assigned special duty to watch a contemplated movement of Longstreet's army.

CHAPTER II.—Gen. Heath leaves Chattanooga with his brigade, and moves out to Morgan's cross-roads. On the way he meets with a girl, who lives at the place he is to make his headquarters. He is surprised to find her with his troops. At her home it is thought that she is a spy. She is surprised to see through the house revealed a suspicious person. Lieut. Hall, the aide, is placed in charge of the young girl with orders to watch her and question her carefully. She flees.

CHAPTER III.—When questioned she said her mother is for the confederate army. For the night she is hidden in the kitchen attempting to burn a paper which contains a list of the confederate soldiers. Lieut. Hall is surprised to see a mysterious face at the window.

CHAPTER IV.—Gen. Heath's command is attacked by confederates, but they are repulsed. During the night Lieut. Hall again sees a mysterious face at the window.

CHAPTER V.—Gen. Heath accepts a parole from the beach at the suggestion of Lieut. Hall, who proposes an answer for her. During the night she slips out of the house and escapes.

CHAPTER VI.—The federal troops are surprised at night and in the light Lieut. Hall is captured.

CHAPTER VII.—Lieut. Hall is taken before a confederate court-martial. He has been a classmate of Gen. Heath at West Point. He is sentenced to be executed. He is allowed to have an informant in the army to the mayor of a southern town in which he was stationed. He flees to the latter.

CHAPTER VIII.—Miss Beach joins Hall outside the confederate camp and together they reach the Union lines.

CHAPTER IX.—The confederates are surprised at their camp. Lieut. Hall is turning to the plantation Hall again sees the face at the window. He is surprised to see that it is a young girl in a confederate uniform. A court-martial is ordered for Miss Beach.

CHAPTER X.—The court finds Miss Beach guilty. It is suggested that she be turned over to the Union army. She is promised to be the guide on a promise of parole and she escapes. She turns up and at night assists Hall to escape.

CHAPTER XI.—After a skirmish with the confederates camp and together they reach the Union lines.

CHAPTER XII.—While Hall is on watch he sees a man in a confederate uniform. He is surprised to see that it is a young girl in a confederate uniform. A court-martial is ordered for Miss Beach.

CHAPTER XIII.—The court finds Miss Beach guilty. It is suggested that she be turned over to the Union army. She is promised to be the guide on a promise of parole and she escapes. She turns up and at night assists Hall to escape.

CHAPTER XIV.—After a skirmish with the confederates camp and together they reach the Union lines.

CHAPTER XV.—They are about to be captured when Miss Beach is rescued. She is promised to be the guide on a promise of parole and she escapes. She turns up and at night assists Hall to escape.

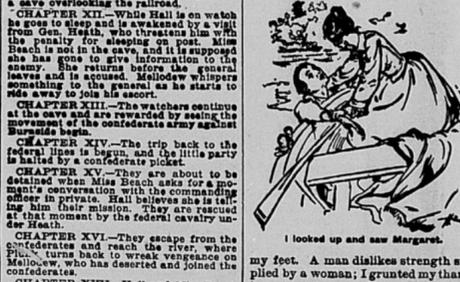

CHAPTER XVI.—They are about to be captured when Miss Beach is rescued. She is promised to be the guide on a promise of parole and she escapes. She turns up and at night assists Hall to escape.

CHAPTER XVII.—Hall and Miss Beach continue the confederate army against the Union lines.

CHAPTER XVIII.—The trip back to the Union lines is begun. The party is halted by a confederate picket.

CHAPTER XIX.—They are about to be captured when Miss Beach is rescued. She is promised to be the guide on a promise of parole and she escapes. She turns up and at night assists Hall to escape.

CHAPTER XX.—They are about to be captured when Miss Beach is rescued. She is promised to be the guide on a promise of parole and she escapes. She turns up and at night assists Hall to escape.

I looked up and saw Margaret.

my feet. A man dislikes strength supplied by a woman; I grunted my thanks in no very warm tone, but retained Margaret's hand, both because I needed its support and because I found it very pleasant standing hand in hand with her. After I had walked to and fro a bit and stamped my feet and swung my arms, I led the way back to the boat, and getting in, was about to take my seat at the oars when Margaret stopped me.

"In the stern, please."

"Who's going to pull?"

"I am."

"With an able-bodied man in the boat, and that man a soldier."

But the mere standing on my legs was too much for my overtaxed strength, and feeling a premonitory buzzing in my ears, I obeyed her order, getting into the stern, and pulled by a girl, meekly assumed the ignominious duty of steering with a barrel stave.

XVIII.

DISTANT GUNS.

A faint tinge of light appeared in the east. The moon, whose tipped face was sinking in the west as though it were dropping asleep after its nightly vigil, began to lose its golden hue and take on a silver gray under the coming sunlight. There was the hush which precedes the opening of day. Here and there on either shore a bird that had not yet set out for its winter resort was chattering over its work of getting breakfast. Above us was an island, and half a mile above the island was Douglis's ferry—a ferry we had sought. Pulling into a little cove near the north end, and dragging the bow of the boat up on the shore, we threw ourselves on the ground, and in five minutes were sound asleep.

We were awakened by men shouting orders, and as soon as I could raise my heavy eyelids I saw a column of confederate cavalry riding down the east bank to the river. Following the ford, their course lay directly off the island on which we were concealed. Most of their officers were well clad in confederate gray, while the men wore anything, chiefly "butternut." They splashed across the river, striking the bank on the opposite side leading from the ferry.

"They're going for the plantation," I exclaimed.

"Hark! What was that? Distant thunder?"

"Thunder? Not in November. That was a gun, and not a morning gun either. My God, it's afternoon! There's a fight going on somewhere."

"Another gun."

"Off to the west, in the direction of the plantation. I see how it is. They're attacking Wilton, or the general, if he is there."

With this time the cavalry had reached the foot of the west bank, and soon after the last files disappeared behind the hills.

"I think we had better pull for the west ferry," said Margaret. "They're doubtless going to join in the fight, and we'll have to follow them, following the road in their wake."

Launching our boat, we pulled to the west shore, striking it a short distance below the ferry. I climbed the embankment, and saw that the coast was clear.

"All right," I said, returning to Margaret. "There's no obstacle in sight; we can take to the land and let the boat go. Good-by, old skiff," and I pushed it out into the stream. "You have served us well."

"Good-by," said Margaret. "Go back to your owner and tell him how thankful we are to him for your use. Say we're sorry we couldn't have asked permission to take you."

"They're coming," I said.

"Who?"

"The rebels."

I heard a din in the opposite direction, on the crest of the hill between us and the plantation. Through a gap at the summit came a scattered body of cavalrymen. It was easy to see that they were fugitives. Down they came, more following, looking neither to the right nor to the left, a panic-stricken mass; they dashed past us and on toward the confederates coming up the road. The latter, seeing that they were just in time to arrest a panic, drew up in line across the road and stolidly waited the coming of the fugitives.

A single horseman shot through the cut at the crest of the hill. Directly behind him came another, then a third, then a column of cavalry bearing the stars and stripes.

Oh, blessed emblem! Only a few yards of bunting, dingy, worn, red, I can never see that field of blue studded with stars, that alternate white and red, without standing again in fancy where I stood that day with the girl who had endured with me so many dangers.

Our men were coming like the wind, but not too fast for me to recognize the man who rode at their head. Rider and horse dashed on like a centaur, with huge leaps, the horse's eyes not more gleaming, his nostrils not more distended, than those of the general.

There was a shock between the two opposing lines, a shouting, swearing, volleys. The confederates were embarrassed with their panic-stricken comrades; the union troops made a wedge through their center and sent them flying down the road.

The general having ordered a pursuit, turned his horse's head and rode leisurely back.

"I'm glad," I cried, as he was riding past without seeing us.

I expected to see his face light up with joy; instead, as soon as his eyes rested upon us, he started, and looked at us ominously.

"You've brought the news, general," I said.

"Without heeding my words, he turned to Maj. Ping, who was near. 'Major,' he said, in a voice that froze the marrow in my bones, 'arrest those two, and take them to the plantation.'"

"General," I cried, "what does this mean?"

"It means, sir, that you are not the first man who has been ruined by a woman."

"I have been saved by a woman."

"Take them away."

"General! For God's sake, explain."

"You have come back here to palm off a spurious report that the expected news has taken place, when we know that it has not."

Margaret and I looked at each other aghast.

"What proof have you, general?" Margaret asked.

"Proof? One of your men came in not an hour ago and revealed the whole plot."

"Who?"

"Private Enoch Melodew."

"He lies," I cried. "Will you believe a coward before your own side's camp?"

"There is supporting evidence against the side."

"But Corporal Plunk—he knows the truth."

"He has not returned."

"But he will."

"Melodew reports that he was taken in disguise in the enemy's lines and hanged."

I turned again to Margaret. "Oh, Margaret," I cried, "who is to shield us from that bound?"

"Guard!" cried the general.

A corporal and half a dozen men rode up and surrounded us. We were too weak to walk, and mounts were provided for us, on which we rode to the plantation, not as triumphant bearers of important military information, but as prisoners.

TO BE CONTINUED.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, about the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed remedies, and by constantly failing to cure it, have proved that it is a constitutional disease, and therefore, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and cleanses the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case that fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.
