The regular March term of the District court for this county commenced last Monday, Judge Platt presiding.

The docket is a large one, there being on the calendar 90 law, 30 equity, 33 probate and 3 criminal cases.

The grand jury was impaneled Monday, and for this term of court is composed of the following named gentlemen: R. G. Brooks, foreman; John J. Carothers; J. S. Reeder; W. L. Storey; C. G. Hamblin, W. P. Hurley and A. B. Clark.

Those of the grand jurors summoned but not drawn to serve at this term of court, were G. W. Kieth, J. H. White, C. H. Parker, Herman Scheerbring and John Krapfl.

The petit jurors summoned to appear Tuesday are, F. C. Atwater, W. R. Porter, Will Jewell, Dan Gifford, W. C. Bradke, Anton Dingbaum, Henry Naber, J. B. Moorman, J. S. Wilson, J. H. Gray, C. Spence, Isaac Littlefield, James Nelson, Jacob Smith, A. E. Dunlap, A. Smith, Fred Powell, J. B. Clark, A. J. Eaton, J. C. Barr, Henry Werneke, George Shearer, John Little and Artie McEnany, of whom Messrs. Jewell, Wilson and Little appeared and were by the court at their request excused from serving.

Upon calling the docket it developed that owing to the absence of witnesses and for other causes, several of the cases noticed for trial could not be reached until the last of the week, and in order to save expense to the county, the court directed the sheriff to notify the trial jurors not to appear until next Monday, and made the following assignment of cases for trial to a jury:

Monday, March 21. Beaver v. Bindner. Durston Lumber Co. v. Parkinson.

Tuesday, 22. Fawcett v. Iowa Fence Co. Atwater v. Riddell.

Wednesday, 23. Hense v. C. G. W. Ry. Co.

BEAUTIFUL HAIR. Sarah Bernhardt's Beauty Doctor Tells How to Obtain It. That a luxuriant head of hair is woman's crowning beauty none disputes, least of all the unfortunates who do not possess one.

Some words of a beauty specialist who for many years has ministered to the charms of the "divine Sarah" may therefore be of interest. He recently gave some points on the care of the hair to the correspondent of an English journal.

First and foremost, he deprecates too much washing, a process which causes the hair to lose its suppleness for some days and be more apt to break.

Next to be commended is the habit some women practice of coxing short hairs to remain in place by wetting them. This not only superinduces neuralgia, but is most harmful to the hair, causing it to rot and to fall out.

The specialist also says that cutting is unnecessary to give vigor and strength to the hair of a healthy woman. Every three months or so the ends should be singed. Singularly enough, the scalp is said to require air, which must be permitted access either by allowing the hair to hang loose down the back for some time daily or by giving it a good deal of attention in the way of brushing and combing.

To restore the luster of the hair after washing it may be anointed slightly at night on retiring with a lotion composed of: Pevovaseline, 25 grams; eau de Cologne, 25 grams; nitrate of pilocarpine, 1 grain.

Some years since a series of experiments for the purpose of showing the effects of tight lacing were made upon monkeys by an enterprising scientist. Those which were corseted and laced at once to the regulation V shape of fashionable women died in the space of a few days, as though stricken by some mortal malady, and others lingered and succumbed after a few months from some disorder of which stays were the undoubted cause.—Dr. Arabella Kenely in Nineteenth Century Review.

DRESSING SACK.

A Dainty Affair Made From Three Bandanna Handkerchiefs.

Bandanna handkerchiefs are cheap nowadays and may be had in brilliant colors and tasteful designs at from 10 cents up. They make beautiful aprons, dressing sacks and kimono. The term bandanna is applied to handkerchiefs twenty-eight inches along each side of the border, manufactured in imitation of the real bandanna, or madras, handkerchiefs, with their rich, indelible colors.

HANDKERCHIEF DRESSING SACK.

The dainty dressing or combing sack shown in the illustration is made of three bandanna handkerchiefs joined together with one and one-half yards of white fagoting, trimmed around the neck with one and one-half yards of narrow lace and finished with three yards of ribbon. First measure around your head with a tape measure, not drawing the measure tightly. Suppose the result is seven inches. In that case you would divide seven inches into three equal lengths and make the bias corner of the handkerchief collar the length of one-third of seven. There is just room to put your head through the hole at the top. A piece of ribbon is sewed on each side the bottom hem of the front handkerchiefs, as in the illustration, and tied together to form sleeves. It is a matter of taste whether roses are added to the bows or not.—New York American.
