"YOU'RE FIRED!"

"You're fired!" Did you ever have it said to YOU? Some folks have and some folks haven't. You can't claim particular distinction either way.

Why do people get fired, anyway? Because the boss has a personal peeve? Maybe—but it's hardly likely.

Every time a new man is employed it costs the employer a great deal of money to train him. This money must be spent before the new man is really an asset to the firm. And employers are not noted for throwing money away.

When a man gets fired it's a pretty safe bet that he's inefficient one way or another.

Now, why should he be inefficient, provided he's been on the job long enough to get on to the ropes? He can't be just plain dumb or he would never have gotten on to the ropes in the first place.

Most men who show themselves inefficient and incapable of holding down a job have the customary amount of gray matter under their hats, but they just can't deliver the goods. Why? Because their health is below par. Ever think of that?

The man who gets fired is a sick man physically. That's what's wrong with him. It isn't lack of brains. No, sir.

The man whose body machine is out of gear CAN'T be an efficient worker. He can't work and he can't think as he should. Brain and body are inseparably connected. Lower the efficiency of the body and the brain goes picking May Flowers instead of tending to business.

The man who gets fired often doesn't know there's anything the matter with his body. He doesn't know there is a civil war going on inside of him. Some day, of course, there'll be a battle of Gettysburg, and then, maybe, an Appomattox surrender.

In the meantime, he's fired. Fired because his body machine, being out of gear, prevents him from putting in his best ticks.

If he had gone to a Chiropractor and had his body machine adjusted he wouldn't have been fired, in all probability, in the first place. Because Chiropractic gets you well and keeps you well.

The great health, science of Chiropractic is the best "job insurance" in the world, because it keeps you at top notch physical efficiency all the time.

CORNELL COLLEGE NEWS.
Norman Pierce of Manchester and Clifford Millen and Mason Lowe of Earlville are charter members of the newly incorporated Howling Hundred. This organization is revolutionizing the cheering at Cornell athletic contests.

The inception of the "Howling Hundred" took place during a midnight celebration of last week's victory over Simpson. One of the features of the hilarious program was the burning of a number of sections of antediluvian bleachers, and it was by the light of the huge bon-fire of oil-soaked lumber that the charter members signed the pledge.

As a result of its initial appearance at this week's victories over Coe and Simpson, the Purple athletics feel assured of the right kind of side-line support in the future.

The royal members of the "Howling Hundred" will check their girls at the door, sit in a specially reserved section, and lead the rooting at the athletic contests of the future.

What Protects The Investment?

Insurance, to be sure—but insurance does not prevent deterioration and decay. Paint is the only thing that does that.

So the owner of any building has a larger investment than ever to protect. A lot of old houses are going to hang on until building costs ease up a bit. All they need is repainting.

We are agents for Bradley-Vrooman paints, and Chi-Namel Varnish Stain.
